

Introduction

Part 3 described how codewords stored in the RAM were read and presented to the character generator at the correct time in order to produce a page of text on a CRT screen.

This was accomplished by the use of logic circuits and, in particular, a read address generator which comprised three counters:

The Character counter, Row counter, Decade counter.