

1. Exaggerated cardiovascular and pulmonary changes of pregnancy
2. Increased risk of uterine atony and postpartum hemorrhage due to greater uterine distention, necessitating large-bore IV access prior to delivery
3. Increased risk of aortocaval compression and hypotension
4. Greater O₂ consumption and decreased FRC compared to singleton pregnancies