Elisabeth Baker received her BA from the University of North Florida, with a major in sociology and a minor in political science. Her contributions to conflict transformation have been presented at the International Conference on College Teaching and Learning. She plans to pursue a degree in law, while continuing to follow her passion for sociology.

Candice C. Carter is an associate professor at the University of North Florida. Her research and scholarship topics include: conflict transformation, peace policy, multicultural education, history/social studies instruction, citizenship education, peace education, peace through arts, peace literature, and teacher training. She serves in many international and national peace, education, and policy organizations as well as in local ones such as the Florida Center for Public and International Policy. Professor Carter designs and facilitates peace education programs in all levels of education, including the interdisciplinary Conflict Transformation Program at the University of North Florida. Her publications in journals and books include a multitude of topics related to peace and human relations.

Susan Daicoff is a professor of Law at Florida Coastal School of Law where she teaches law as a healing profession. She has been a psychotherapist as well as a corporate, securities, and tax-transactional lawyer. Her research has examined well-being and decision-making in the legal profession as well as methods in the field of comprehensive law.

John W. Frank is an organization development consultant to non-profit organizations and an instructor at the University of North Florida where he teaches courses in public policy, leadership, and conflict transformation. His research explores how leaders and organizations engage constituents in moral/evaluative dialogue and how those processes shape organizational identity, organizational culture, and strategic planning, while at the same time building social capital that sustains democratic society. Additional information about Dr. Frank's work and research, along with contact information, is available at www.talkingthewalk.net.

Susan D. Russell is a professor in the Department of Anthropology and faculty associate of the Center for Southeast Asian Studies, Northern Illinois University, and has over eight years of experience researching and teaching in the Philippines. She has been project director of several large grants focused on peacebuilding, inter-ethnic dialogue, civic engagement, and conflict transformation in the southern Philippines.

Ma. Teresa Tuason is an associate professor of Psychology at the University of North Florida and is a licensed psychologist. She teaches courses in conflict transformation and counseling psychology while researching the influence of culture and economic status in conflict transformation.

Rey Ty is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Counseling, Adult and Higher Education/International Training Office, Northern Illinois University. He has twenty-five years of experience with teaching and other professional work in peace, conflict resolution, conflict transformation, human rights, and social justice projects.

Casey Welch, an assistant professor of sociology at Flagler College in Florida, has held positions at the Washington State University, Portland State University, and the University of North Florida. His research interests include homelessness, media, criminal courts, conflict transformation, and pedagogy.

Cirecie West-Olatunji is an assistant professor of counselor education at the University of Florida. She is a licensed professional counselor, domestic mediator, and family therapist. Her research in multicultural counseling theory examines the role of cultural identity in psychological, emotional, and educational development.

Sharon Tamargo Wilburn is a professor and director of the Center for Aging Research in the Brooks College of Health, Department of Public Health at the University of North Florida, and has over twenty years of experience as a psychotherapist and clinical supervisor. Her research examines health behavior and counseling with diverse special populations.

Richmond Wynn is a doctoral candidate at the University of Florida. He is a licensed mental health counselor and a certified addiction professional. His research interests are in multiculturalism, gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender issues, and the intersectionality of identity.
