CHARLENE VILLASEÑOR BLACK is currently assistant professor in the Department of Art History of the University of California, Los Angeles, where she teaches courses on early modern Spain, colonial Latin America, modern Mexico, and Chicano/a visual cultures. Her research interests include new approaches to religious imagery with particular attention to postmodern, postcolonial, and feminist theorists; constructions of race, national identity, and multiculturalism; theories of colonialism and postcolonialism; as well as early modern art theory and rhetoric. She is the author of Constructing the Cult of St. Joseph: Art and Gender in the Spanish Empire (forthcoming, Princeton University Press).

KAREN ROSOFF ENCARNACIÓN is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of History of Art and Architecture at Harvard University. Her research focuses on the relationship between art and science in early modern Europe and, in particular, the role of images and crafted objects in the changing moral and epistemological status of visual experience. She is currently working on an interdisciplinary dissertation in the histories of science and art titled “Images of Anatomy, Idols of Devotion: The Reformation of Mortality and Experience in Sixteenth-Century Germany.”

JANET HUSKINSON is Senior Lecturer in Classical Studies at the Open University in the United Kingdom, and is currently serving as head of department. Her interests are in the art of the Roman Empire, particularly in the third and fourth centuries C.E. and its social context. She has published a book and articles on the imagery used on Roman sarcophagi of the period.

GERALDINE A. JOHNSON is a lecturer in the Department of the History of Art at the University of Oxford. Much of her research has focused on the history of sculpture from the late medieval period to the present day, including an edited volume titled Sculpture and Photography: Envisioning the Third Dimension (Cambridge University Press, 1998). At present, she is completing a book on the visual and tactile reception of sculpture in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Italy. Her interest in the role played by gender in the production and reception of art is demonstrated by her publications on the artistic patronage of the French Queen Maria de' Medici and by a prize-winning volume she co-edited titled Picturing Women in Renaissance and Baroque Italy (Cambridge University Press, 1997).

ANNE L. MCCLANAN, assistant professor of Art History at Portland State University, received her Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1998. Her work includes a monograph on early Byzantine imperial women forthcoming next year from Palgrave in the New Middle Ages series and a transhistorical anthology of case studies of iconoclasm. Her interest in the study of material culture began with archeological fieldwork in Jordan and Turkey.

KATHARINE PARK is Zemurray Stone Radcliffe Professor of the History of Science and Women's Studies at Harvard University. She studies the history of medicine and the life sciences in late medieval and Renaissance Europe. Her most recent book is Wonders and the Order of Nature, 1150–1750 (New York: Zone, 1998), coauthored with Lorraine Daston. Her essay in this volume is part of a book in progress on gender, generation, and the origins of human dissection.

HELMUT PUFF, assistant professor at the University of Michigan with a joint appointment in German and History, specializes in gender history and early modern German history and literature. Currently, he is finishing a book-length study entitled, Narrating the Unspeakable: Sodomy in Reformation Germany and Switzerland, 1400–1600.

ADRIAN W. B. RANDOLPH, associate professor of Art History, Women's Studies, and Comparative Literature at Dartmouth College. His most recent work addresses gender and the formation of political art in fifteenth-century Florence; a book on this topic, focusing on Medici patronage and the sculpture of Donatello, will appear with Yale University Press. He is also currently co-editing with T. Barton Thurber a special issue of Word & Image devoted to the development of printed and medallic portraits in early modern Europe.

PAULA M. RIEDER is currently assistant professor of Medieval History at the University of Nebraska at Kearney. She studied the social and cultural history of medieval Europe at the University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign. Her interests include gender, women, and religion in medieval France, and the interaction between ritual and law in shaping social norms and identities. Her essay in this collection is part of a book in progress on the liturgical and social celebration of churching and its influence on attitudes toward marriage, gendered notions of power and purity, and women's roles as wives and mothers.

VERONICA SEKULES is the Head of Education at the Sainsbury Centre for Visual Arts, University of East Anglia, Norwich. This essay represents her broader interest in women and gender in medieval art, and textiles in late medieval France in particular. She has written a survey, Medieval Art, in the Oxford History of Art series.

ALICIA WALKER is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of the History of Art and Architecture at Harvard University. Her study of early Byzantine marriage rings in this collection developed from her interest in physical adornment, particularly the adornment of women, as a social practice and a rhetorical trope in the Byzantine world. Her dissertation deals with artistic interaction between Byzantium and Islam between the end of Iconoclasm (843 C.E.) and the Fourth Crusade (1204 C.E.). She is also collaborating on an art exhibition that will explore the role of women in Byzantine art and society.
