Gina Caison is a PhD candidate at the University of California, Davis in the Department of English, with a designated emphasis from the Department of Native American Studies. Currently, she is completing her dissertation on the use and reception of Native American history in cultural and literary texts of the U.S. Southeast. Her work has appeared or is forthcoming in Mississippi Quarterly, North Carolina Literary Review, and The Velvet Light Trap: A Critical Journal of Film and Television.

Thomas Cartelli is professor of English and Film Studies at Muhlenberg College. He is the author of Marlowe, Shakespeare, and the Economy of Theatrical Experience (University of Pennsylvania Press, 1991), Repositioning Shakespeare: National Formations, Postcolonial Appropriations (University of Pennsylvania Press, 1999), and (with Katherine Rowe) New Wave Shakespeare on Screen (Polity, 2007).

Sara Eaton is professor of English at North Central College. She has published numerous articles on Shakespeare, the drama of his contemporaries, women's writing, and early modern culture.

Jonathan Gil Harris is professor of English at George Washington University. He is the author of Foreign Bodies and the Body Politic: Discourses of Social Pathology in Early Modern England (Cambridge, 1998), Sick Economies: Drama, Mercantilism and Disease (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2004), Untimely Matter in the Time of Shakespeare (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2008), Shakespeare and Literary Theory (Oxford, 2010), and Marvellous Repossessions: The Tempest, Globalization, and the Waking Dream of Paradise (Ronsdale, 2012). He is the editor, with Natasha Korda, of Staged Properties in Early Modern English Drama (Cambridge, 2002), and editor of the 3rd New Mermaids edition of Thomas Dekker's The Shoemaker's Holiday (Methuen, 2008). He is also associate editor of Shakespeare Quarterly.

Marion Hollings is professor of English at Middle Tennessee State University and lecturer in Women's and Gender Studies. She is international bibliographer for Encomia: Bibliographical Bulletin of the International Courtly Literature Society. Her essays have appeared in several collections, including most recently, The English Renaissance, Orientalism, and the Idea of Asia, ed. Debra Johanyak and Walter S. H. Lim (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010). She is completing a book on discourses of gender, race, and nation in Spenser's The Faerie Queene and early modern travel narratives to the Middle East, India, and Southeast Asia.

Gavin Hollis is assistant professor of English at Hunter College, City University of New York. He is currently completing his book manuscript, The Absence of America on the Early Modern Stage.

Bindu Malieckal is associate professor of English at Anselm College. She has edited two collections of essays: Shakespeare and Postcolonial India (a special issue of Upstart Crow, 2002) and, with Nabil Matar, Muslim and Non-Muslim Women in the Empires of Islam, 1453–1798 (a special issue of The Muslim World, 2005). Currently, she is writing a book on India's Jews, Christians, and Muslims in early modern literature.

Carmen Nocentelli is assistant professor of English and Comparative Literature at the University of New Mexico. She has published articles and chapters on various facets of early modern Europe's expansion overseas, and is currently completing a book on race, sexuality, and the Euro-Asian encounter.

Karen Robertson is professor of English and Director of Medieval and Renaissance Studies at Vassar College. She has published extensively on Pocahontas, and her book Pocahontas among the Jacobean, a study of the intersections of gender, race, and class in Jacobean England, is forthcoming.

Craig Rustici is professor of English at Hofstra University and author of The Afterlife of Pope Joan: Deploying the Pope Joan Legend in Early Modern England (University of Michigan Press, 2006). He has also published articles on early modern tobacco, Spenser, and Bacon.

Amrita Sen is assistant professor of English at Oklahoma City University. She works on early modern drama, cosmopolitanism, and the East Indies trade; she has also published on Bollywood appropriations of Shakespeare.

Jyotsna G. Singh is professor of English at Michigan State University. Her books include The Weyward Sisters: Shakespeare and Feminist Politics (Routledge, 1993), coauthored with Dymphna Callaghan and Lorraine Helms; Colonial Narratives/Cultural Dialogues: 'Discovery' of India in the Language of Colonialism (Routledge, 1999); and Travel Knowledge: European 'Discoveries' in the Early Modern Period (Palgrave, 2003), coedited with Ivo Kamps. She is editor of A Companion to the Global Renaissance: English Literature and Culture in the Era of Expansion, 1559–1660 (Blackwell, 2009), and is currently working on a book manuscript entitled 'To Live by Traffic': Early Modern Colonial Encounters, 1550–1670.

James W. Stone is a visiting fellow in the Department of English Language and Literature at The National University of Singapore, and the author of Crossing Gender in Shakespeare: Feminist Psychoanalysis and the Difference Within (Routledge, 2010).

Jeanette N. Tran is an associate faculty member at the Gallatin School of Individualized Study at NYU, and a PhD candidate at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. She is writing her dissertation on early modern drama, decorum, and representations of the foreign.

Melissa Walter teaches Shakespeare and early modern literature in the English Department at the University of the Fraser Valley. She has published many articles on early modern literature and culture, with a special emphasis on issues of transnational travel and exchange.
