Diana Epelbaum is a doctoral candidate in English at The Graduate Center, City University of New York. Her dissertation explores eighteenth-century women's natural histories through the intersection of genre, gender, and early American studies. A 2009 recipient of The New York Times's "Teachers Who Make a Difference" award, she holds a master's degree in literacy education and currently teaches composition.

Bernard Koloski has published books and articles about Chopin for many years. He edits the website KateChopin.org.

Correna Catlett Merricks is an assistant professor of English and Director of the Center for Academic Excellence at Asbury University in Wilmore, Kentucky. She specializes in late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century American women's fiction, focusing on representations of motherhood and the domestic life. She received her Ph.D. in English from the University of Mississippi in 2012.

Kate O'Donoghue earned her Ph.D. in English from the CUNY Graduate Center in February 2015. She specializes in nineteenth-century American women's fiction, digital pedagogy, and composition and rhetoric. She is currently a hybrid coordinator at Baruch College's Center for Teaching and Learning, where she advises faculty on hybrid and online courses and provides educational technology support. She also serves as a writing consultant and instructor for City University of New York-affiliated early college programs at Townsend Harris High School and the Queens School of Inquiry.

Heather Ostman is an associate professor of English and Director of the Humanities Institute at SUNY Westchester Community College in Valhalla, New York. She is the editor of Kate Chopin in the Twenty-First Century (Cambridge Scholars Press, 2008) and the author of Writing Program Administration and the Community College (Parlor Press, 2013). In addition to book chapters, she has written many articles, which have appeared in journals such as College Composition and Communication, Prose Studies, Philological Studies, Women's Studies, and others. She is the president of the Kate Chopin International Society.

Eulalia Piñero Gil is an associate professor in American Literature and Gender Studies at the Universidad Autónoma of Madrid. She has coedited Voices and Images of Women in 20th Century Theater: Anglo-American Women Playwrights (2002), Women and Art: Visions of Change and Social Development (2010) and Breaking a Sea of Silence: Interdisciplinary Reflections on Gender Violence (2013). In 2012, she translated and edited Kate Chopin's The Awakening (2012) in Spanish. She has published extensively on American modernism, comparative literature, women's literature, gender studies, music and literature, and nineteenth-century American literature. She is member of the Kate Chopin International Society Website Advisory Committee.

Mohanalakshmi Rajakumar is a writer and educator with a Ph.D. in literature. She has published numerous books and journals, including four novels. An Unlikely Goddess (2014) was recognized by She Writes with the New Novelist award. Love Comes Later (2012) was the winner of the Best Indie Book Award for Romance in 2013. Dr. Rajakumar is at work on her first crime novel, set in the Arabian Gulf

Geetha Rajeswar studied interior design at Virginia Commonwealth University in Qatar. As a member of Dr. Rajakumar's social science research group, she co-wrote articles such as the chapter that appears in this volume. She has also contributed to conference presentations related to race, gender, and writing pedagogy.

Aparecido Donizete Rossi is a professor of British Literature at UNESP (São Paulo State University), Araraquara, Brazil. His Ph.D. thesis, Segredos do Sótão: Feminismo e Escritura na obra de Kate Chopin (Attic Secrets: Feminism and Writing in the Works of Kate Chopin) addresses the intersection between Feminism and Deconstruction in the works of Kate Chopin. He is a member of the Kate Chopin International Society and editor of the Portuguese page of KateChopin.org.

Patricia J. Schulster is an associate professor of English and the co-director of the Honors Program at SUNY Westchester Community College.
