

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

THE original sources of all quotations used in these lectures are given in the footnotes. The following is a short list of commentaries and critical histories which have some general bearing on the topics under discussion.

- BOWLEY, M. Nassau Senior and Classical Economics, London, 1937.
- CANNAN, E. A Review of Economic Theory, London, 1929.
- DICEY, A. V. Law and Public Opinion in England during the Nineteenth Century, 2nd Edition, London, 1914.
- HALÉVY, E. The Growth of Philosophical Radicalism, Cheap Edition, London, 1934.
- HAYEK, F. Individualism and Economic Order, London, 1948.
- HUTT, W. H. Economists and the Public, London, 1936.
- MACGREGOR, D. H. Economic Thought and Policy, London, 1949.
- SCHATZ, A. L'Individualisme, économique et social, Paris, 1907.
- SCHÜLLER, R. Die klassische Nationalökonomie und ihre Gegner, Berlin, 1895.
- STEPHEN, L. History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 3rd Edition, London, 1902.
- The English Utilitarians*, London, 1900.
- TAUSSIG, F. Wages and Capital: an Examination of the Wages Fund Doctrine, New York, 1897.
- VINER, J. "Adam Smith and Laissez-Faire", being Chapter V of Adam Smith, 1776-1926: Lectures to Commemorate the Sesquicentennial of the Publication of the "Wealth of Nations", by J. M. Clark & Others, Chicago, 1928.
- "Bentham and J. S. Mill: the Utilitarian Background", American Economic Review, March 1949.

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

- Akbar : cited by John Stuart Mill as a benevolent despot, 185
- Ashley, Sir W. : his mistaken picture of the London Political Economy Club, 3 ; Appendix K to his edition of Mill's Principles, its value and its limitations, 143 n.
- Bagehot, W. : his fear of universal suffrage, 201
- Bain, Alexander : cited in refutation of Dr. Gunnar Myrdal's misrepresentation of John Stuart Mill, 67 n. ; on Mill and inheritance, 151 n.
- Banking School : its dispute with the Currency School, 30, 32
- Bastiat : his conception of the functions of the state, 36 ; his conception of the system of economic freedom contrasted with that of the English Classical Economists, 46-49 ; chosen by Cairnes as typical representative of laissez-faire attitude, 48
- Bentham, J. : a Classical Economist, 2 ; a Philosophical Radical, 3 ; reference to the "mundane school of wealth", 10 n. ; "Diogenes' request to Alexander", 12 ; on freedom for the consumer, 13, 14 ; on the discipline of the market, 16, 17 ; although father of modern civil service no less individualist than Adam Smith, 18, 19 ; against public purchases of antique statues, rare books, etc., 22 ; empiricism of his critique of the Usury Laws, 24 ; his conception of the functions of the state, 38-43 ; no precursor of Schmoller, 40 n. ; on institutions involving indiscriminate benefit, 41 ; his ideal cabinet, 42 ; the theory of property, 55 n. ; on value of publicity in regard to advantages of different branches of industry, 59 ; poverty not due to the institution of property, 61 ; formulation of the principle of declining social marginal utility, 62 ; establishment of equality a chimera, 63 ; diminution of inequality an objective, 63 ; on the law relating to inheritance, 64 ; on opposition to machinery, 104 ; opposes wage fixing by authority, 104, 105 ; on the "levelling system", 118, 119 ; on the community of goods, 119, 120 ; not an originator of ethical utilitarianism, 177 ; recognizes difficulty of interpersonal comparisons of utility, 180 ; his use of the felicific calculus not minutely arithmetical, 181 ; contrasted with John Stuart Mill as regards the basis of his individualism, 185, 186 ; on the impossibility of distinguishing what laws are economical and what are not, 191, 192 ; his case for representative government based on universal suffrage, 197
- Bowley, Dr. Marian : cited on Senior and the Poor Law, 98 ; cited on Senior on child labour, 101 n.
- Brougham : a recipient of James Mill's opinions on Hodgskin, 135 ; his connexion with the booklet entitled The Rights of Industry, 135 n.
- Buchanan, David : his clear recognition of contrast between philosophical foundation of Physiocratic and Classical systems, 48
- Cairnes, J. E. : a Classical Economist, 2 ; chooses Bastiat as target for frontal attack on laissez-faire, 48
- Cannan, E. : 1 ; on Ricardo in Parliament, cited, 22 n.
- Cantillon : 172
- Carlyle, T. : "anarchy plus the constable", 34
- Catherine the Great : her alleged conversation with Mercier de la Rivière, 34-36

- Charlemagne : cited by John Stuart Mill as a benevolent despot, 185
- Colbert : Adam Smith's description of, 18
- Commissioners on the Condition of the Handloom Weavers : on the functions of government, 47 ; on the effects of a fall of wages or a slack demand for labour, 72, 73 ; desirability of health legislation, 89, 90 ; on the desirability of compulsory education, 92-93 ; reject proposals for wage boards, 105
- Cooper, Thomas : his criticism of Hodgskin, 135 n.
- Currency School : its dispute with the Banking School, 30, 32
- De Quincey : his verdict on the attitude of the Lake Poets to political economy contrasted with Mill's judgment of Coleridge, 145 n.
- Diogenes : his request to Alexander, quoted by Bentham, 12
- Edgeworth, F. Y. : 1
- Field, J. A. : cited on the connexion of the Classical Economists and the early birth-control movement in Great Britain, 79
- Foxwell, H. S. : 1
- Fullarton : cited as representative of Banking School, 32
- Furness, E. : his Position of the Labourer in a System of Nationalism, cited as evidence of the Mercantilist attitude to low wages, 73 n.
- German Historical School : united with Marxians in suggesting that the scientific basis of the Classical Theory was just a façade, 172
- Godwin : criticized by Malthus, 121-125
- Gonnard : his plea for recognition of an empirical and utilitarian point of view in the Physiocrats, 48
- Halévy, E. : on Radicals and public utilities, 58 n. ; his discovery of Bentham's important fragment on the dimension of happiness, 180 ; his misunderstanding of the attitude of the Classical Economists to law, 190-192
- Hayek, F. A. : his study of John Stuart Mill and Harriet Taylor cited, 144 n.
- Heckscher, Eli : on lack of sympathy of Classical Economists to claims for coercive power for bodies intermediate between the citizen and the state, 105
- Himes, Norman : cited on the connexion of the Classical Economists and the early birth-control movement in Great Britain, 79
- Horner, Francis : his support of the Bill of 1815 for the limitation of hours of labour among children, 101
- Hume, D. : a Classical Economist, 2 ; a Tory, 3 ; as a British subject prayed for the flourishing commerce of other countries, 10 n. ; on the significance of changes in the volume of money, 29 ; on the Physiocrats, 49, 50 ; his theory of property based on conception of utility, 49-55 ; his theory of justice essential to the Classical theory of self-interest, 57 ; his attitude to common ownership and to proposals for egalitarian distribution, 112-115 ; rationale of state action supplementing the ownership of property, 113 n. ; his detachment contrasted with the zeal of J. S. Mill, 170 ; scientific nature of his treatment of money, 174 ; his belief in the importance of systematic thought on social problems, 174 ; his priority over Bentham in the application of the principle of utility to social problems, 177-178 ; his utilitarianism not accompanied by any undue claims of precision, 181 ; his attitude to the forms of government, 195, 196
- Hume, Joseph : 107
- Hunt, B. C. : his Development of the Business Corporation in England cited, 55 n.
- Hutt, W. H. : on Adam Smith's occasional use of theological terminology, 25 n. ; cited on the willingness of the Classical Economists to apply special rules and regulations where, for technical reasons, competition is not possible, 191

- Jones, Richard : his horrified account of the attitude of the later Classical Economists to the population problem, 80 n.
- Kent, Duke of : his relations with Robert Owen, 129-131 ; his devotion to the public interest, as recorded by Mr. Creevey, cited, 129 n.
- Keynes, Lord : his praise of the public spirit of the Classical Economists, 20 ; on Malthus, 30 ; his definition of the functions of the state compared with that of Adam Smith, 37, 38 ; his serious misapprehension of Bentham's conception of the functions of the state, 39
- Lassalle : his simile of the night watchman, 34
- Lindsay, Lord, of Birker : his views on the attitude of the Classical Economists to the condition of the people, 68, 69 ; the inaccuracy of these views demonstrated in detail, 69-73 ; his failure to distinguish between the teaching of Mercantilism and of Classical Political Economy, 73
- List : his accusation that the Classical Economists neglected the importance of productive power, 9
- Locke : his conception of the state of nature, 55
- London Political Economy Club : 2, 3
- Lubac : his work on Mill and Socialism, 143 n.
- Macaulay, T. B. : his critique of Mill's Essay on Government, 199-200
- McCulloch, J. R. : a Classical Economist, 2 ; his conception of the functions of the state and his repudiation of laissez-faire, 43-45 ; on limited liability, 55 n. ; on limitation of dividends of public utility companies, 58 ; poverty not a creation of property, 62 n. ; a conservative on the law relating to inheritance, 64 ; his praise of high wages, 70-72 ; on the hope of a rise in the natural level of wages due to the maintenance of a high market rate by sustained accumulation, 80-82 ; a supporter of popular education, 93 ; his letter to Lord Shaftesbury supporting the limitation of the hours of labour for children, 101, 102 ; his attack on the Combination Acts, 107, 108 ; his Discourse on the Rise, Progress, Peculiar Objects and Importance of Political Economy, cited as evidence of the belief of the Classical Economists in the importance for policy of political economy, 174 n.
- Macgregor, D. H. : his contention regarding the Classical attitude to laissez-faire supported in general, questioned in some particulars, 43, 44 n.
- Maine, Sir Henry : the opinion of his Brahmin acquaintance, 180
- Mallet, J. L. : his testimony to the lack of unanimity of the London Political Economy Club, 3 n.
- Malthus, T. : a Classical Economist, 2 ; his dispute with Ricardo, a disproof of the alleged unanimity of the Classical School, 3 ; a Whig, 3 ; his opposition to free importation of corn not typical of his attitude to trade in general, 19 n. ; his references to Divine Wisdom extraneous to his analysis, 28, n. ; his partial anticipation of Keynes, 30 ; in spite of his heterodoxy, as regards aggregate demand, not conspicuously out of step in general theory of the function of the state, 32, 33 ; his denunciation of riches achieved at the expense of low wages, 70 ; his evidence before the Emigration Commission on wages, 70 ; his view on the tendency of wages to subsistence level, as set out in the first edition of his Essay on Population, 75 ; modification of these views in subsequent editions and significance of the modifications, 76-82 ; his conception of moral restraint did not include birth control, 79 ; his misunderstanding of Ricardo's chapter On Gross and Net Revenue, 87, 88 ; on the desirability of public education, 92 ; was in favour of the total, though gradual, abolition of Poor Laws, 94, 95 ; his approval of Robert Owen's propaganda for limiting the hours of work among

- children, 101; the theory of population as a critique of collectivism, 120-126; Malthus and Godwin, 121-125; and Robert Owen, 126
- Manchester School: distinguished from Classical School, 3
- Marshall, A.: 1; his phrase "the system of economic freedom", 11
- Martineau, Harriet: strong disinclination of John Stuart Mill for his name to be associated with hers, 167 n.
- Marxians: united with members of the German Historical School in suggesting that the scientific basis of the Classical Theory was a façade, 172
- Mercier de la Rivière: his alleged conversation with Catherine the Great, 34-36; his conception of the system of economic freedom contrasted with that of the English Classical Economists, 46-49; on the rationale of property, 49
- Mill, James: a Classical Economist, 2; a Philosophical Radical, 3; on consumption as the end of production, 7; on the "law of markets", 30; his optimism concerning the possibility of raising wages by limiting population, 78; his letter to Brougham on the opinions of Hodgskin, 135; his dialogue Whether Political Economy is Useful, 175, 176; his Essay on Government, 197
- Mill, John Stuart: a Classical Economist, 2; a Philosophical Radical, 3; his approval of conscription, 10 n.; on the incentive of self-interest, 14, 15; on the conflict between interests of landowners and the interests of society, 28; on influence of consumption on production, 30; repudiation of laissez-faire, 44, n.; recognizes contrast between English and Continental theory of policy in essay on Comte, 48; on property and limited liability, 55 n.; on protection to infant industries, 59-60; on justification for government intervention in economic life in backward areas, 60, 61; on private property and inheritance: recommendation of an absolute upper limit, 64, 65; attacks progressive taxation, 66, 67; favours tax on the increment of land values, 67; his attitude to inheritance taxes misrepresented by Dr. Gunnar Myrdal, 67 n.; on the significance for the theory of economic policy of the Malthusian theory of population, 77-78; his connexion with the early birth-control movement in Great Britain, 79; his emphatic approval of the principle of the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834, 98-100; thought the classing together of women and children for purposes of factory legislation indefensible in principle and mischievous in practice, 102, 103; his dissent from the attitude of trade unions to competition, 106; his favourable attitude to trade unionism and his reserve on the manner in which the power of the unions was sometimes used, 109, 110; on guaranteed employment, 140-141, n.; his attitude to socialism, 142-168; his undue deference to Fourier, 143; his emotional unbalance and his marriage, 143-144; his attitude to Bentham and Coleridge, 144, 145; his confession of belief in the principles of St.-Simonism to d'Eichtal, 146; adverse conclusion of discussion of socialism in first edition of the Principles, 147-151; change of attitude in third edition of Principles, 151-155; significance of this change, 155-160; on socialism and the pricing problem, 159 n.; the posthumous chapters on Socialism, 160-165; on the possibilities of Fourierism, 163, 164 n.; large-scale centralized collectivism described as chimerical, 164; interpretation of apparent variations in Mill's attitude, 165-168; objects to the coupling of his name with that of Harriet Martineau by Charles Kingsley, 167 n.; his zeal contrasted with the detachment of David Hume, 170; scientific nature of his treatment of international exchange, 174; cites Akbar and Charlemagne as benevolent despots, 185; contrasted with Bentham as regards the basis of individualism, 185, 186; his case for representative government based on universal suffrage, 202,

- 203; his apprehensions of the prospects of unmitigated democracy and his suggested remedies, 203-205
- Mill, James and John Stuart: as officials of the East India Company well acquainted with special responsibilities of government in backward areas, 183
- Mints, Lloyd: 32
- Myint, H.: on difference between Classical and Neo-Classical outlook, 16 n.
- Myrdal, Dr. Gunnar: his surprising innuendo regarding Mill's attitude to death duties, 67 n.
- Newton, Isaac: the validity of his scientific thought not to be judged by his theology, 24, 25
- Norman, G. W.: on limited liability, 55 n.
- Overstone: his dispute with Tooke, a disproof of the alleged unanimity of the Classical School, 3; cited as representative of Currency School, 31; on limited liability, 55 n.; on the distress caused by a fall in wages or a slack demand for labour, 72, 73
- Owen, Robert: his parallelograms, 127; his relation with Bentham and Ricardo, 127; his New View of Society, criticized by Torrens, 127-129; his relations with the Duke of Kent, 129-131; his cross-examination by the Select Committee on Conditions of Labour in Ireland, 131-134; adverse report of the Select Committee on his project, 133-134
- Physiocrats: 172
- Place, Francis: his vindication of the Classical Economists as friends of the working classes, 73 n.; his role in the history of Neo-Malthusianism, 79; his role in the repeal of the Combination Acts, and his connexion with the Classical Economists, 107
- Plato: 111, 182
- Quesnai: significance of his motto for the title-page of Physiocratie, 47
- Read, Samuel: his discussion of Hodgskin's socialism, 135 n.
- Ricardians: significance of their belief in conflict between interests of landowners and interests of society, 28; on the "law of markets", 30; and Robert Owen, 126-134; their disregard of Ricardian socialism, 134
- Ricardo, D.: a Classical Economist, 2; his dispute with Malthus, a disproof of the alleged unanimity of the Classical School, 3; a Philosophical Radical, 3; his recommended reduction of the corn duties by stages, 8; his development of the theory of comparative advantage, 16; his proposal for a capital levy, 22 n.; favoured strict regulation of note issue, 31; his emphatic endorsement of Malthus' repudiation of the plea for low wages, 70 n.; expresses wish that labouring classes should have a taste for comforts and enjoyments, 78; misunderstandings of the Classical attitude to the condition of the people problem based upon misapprehension of his theories, 82-89; his assumption for certain theoretical purposes of wages at subsistence level due to pressure of population, 83, 84; his misleading use of the term "wages" as equivalent to "proportionate share" of the social product, 84, 85; his discussion of taxable capacity and the misunderstanding of his propositions in this connexion by Say and Malthus, 85-89; favoured abolition of Poor Laws, 94; his defence of truck on account of Robert Owen's experiment, 100; cited as unfavourable to the Combination Acts, 107 n.; involved in the investigation of Owen's proposals at a mass meeting in the City, 129; his account of this episode to Hutches Trower, 129-130; his support of the motion for a Select Committee to inquire into Robert Owen's project, 130, 131; his membership of the Select Committee to inquire into the Conditions of Labour in Ireland which eventually examined Robert Owen

- in 1823, 131; his opinion of Piercy Ravenstone's A Few Doubts as to the Correctness of Some Opinions which had been entertained on the Subjects of Population and Political Economy, 134; a cautious supporter of universal suffrage, 198
- Robertson, H. M.: cited on quotation from Adam Smith's Theory of Moral Sentiments, 117
- Say, J. B.: on the "law of markets", 30; his misunderstanding of Ricardo's chapter On Gross and Net Revenue, 87
- Schatz, A.: cited on two types of individualism, 48
- Senior, Nassau: a Classical Economist, 2; a Whig, 3; distinction between productive and unproductive consumption, 9; his development of the theory of comparative advantage, 16; his conception of the functions of the state, 45; his allusion to functions of government in the Report on the Handloom Weavers, 47 n.; quotes Mill with approval on paternalism, 60; on the distress caused by a fall of wages or a slack demand for labour, 72, 73; as author of the principles of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, 95; his general test of projects of relief, 96; favours provision for blind, insane, chronic invalids and the maimed, also fever hospitals and provision for orphans, 96, 97; opposes special provision for old age, 97; the Principle of Less Eligibility, his solution of the problem of the relief of the able-bodied poor, 97-98; his attitude to the employment of child labour, 101; on female labour in mines, 102; his apprehension of the powers of trade unions, 108, 109; his attitude to socialism as revealed in his discussion of the events of 1848, 134-141; his Introductory Lecture on Political Economy, cited as evidence of the belief of the Classical Economists in the importance of political economy, 174 n.; his distrust of universal suffrage, 200-201
- Simons, Henry: his formulation of the contrast between the liberal and authoritarian attitude cited, 193
- Smith, Adam: a Classical Economist, 2; a Whig, 3; on consumption as end of production, 7; recognition of advantages of services involving indiscriminate benefit, 9; distinction between productive and unproductive consumption, 9; his dictum that defence is more important than opulence and his repudiation of cosmopolitanism, 10; the simile of the invisible hand, 11; on the incentive of self-interest, 14; on the discipline of the market, 15; on the presumption of economic dictators, 17, 18; on Colbert, 18; his distrust of merchants and dealers and the influence of masters, 20-22; his use of the terminology of deism likely to lead to misapprehension, 24; invokes no harmony in describing conspiracies of traders, 25, 26; his depressing picture of eighteenth-century China, 26-28; on landlords, 28 n.; specifically excepts the currency from the sphere of "natural liberty", 31; his definition of the functions of the state, 37; this definition compared with that of Keynes, 37, 38; uses terminology of the Naturrecht but his arguments utilitarian, 48; on control of monopoly price, 58; circumstances in which he was prepared to grant a limited monopoly to merchants, 59; favours proportionate taxation, 66; his praise of high wages, 69, 70; on the connexion between population and wages, 73-75; on the desirability of public education, 90-91; his opposition to truck, 100; his attitude to Mercantilism and possible indication of his attitude to collectivism, 115-117; scientific nature of his treatment of the division of labour and the market, 174; the utilitarian nature of the tests of policy in the Wealth of Nations, 178
- Smith, Southwood: his Report on Bethnal Green and Whitechapel cited by the Commissioners on the Condition of the Handloom Weavers, 89

- Smith, Vera : 32
- Spencer, Herbert : his conception of the functions of the state, 36 ; his individualism based on the theory of natural rights and antithetical to utilitarianism, 48, 49
- Taussig, W. : on the use of the wage fund theory by the Classical Economists, 110 n.
- Thiebault : his account of the alleged conversation between Mercier de la Rivière and Catherine the Great, cited, 35
- Tocqueville, Alexis de : quoted by Senior on the droit au travail, 138-139
- Tooke, T. : his dispute with Overstone a disproof of the alleged unanimity of the Classical School, 3 ; cited as representative of Banking School, 32 ; on limited liability, 55 n.
- Torrens, R. : a Classical Economist, 2 ; his development of the theory of comparative advantage, 16 ; cited as representative of Currency School, 31 ; repudiation of laissez-faire, 44 n. ; urges formation of compensation fund for relief of displaced operatives, 104
- Viner, Jacob : on Adam Smith's alleged Harmonielehre, 25 n. ; on Bentham on the functions of the state, 39, 40 ; on Halévy's misunderstanding of the Classical Economists, 191
- Wallas, Graham : his Life of Francis Place cited, 73 n. ; cited on Place's attitude to the future of trade unions, 108 n.
- Webb, S. and B. : cited on the attitude of Senior to trade unions, 108 n.
- Wheatley, John : his second thoughts on currency, 31 ; use of term laissez-faire, 44 n.