Index

A
Abou El Fadl, Khaled, 193n
Abrahamian, Ervand, 117n
Ackerman, Bruce, 202n
Ahmadinejad, Mahmoud, 64, 179
Akhavi, Shahroukh, 124n Alamdari, Kazem, 201n
al-Amili, Al-Hurr, 134n
Alavitabar, Alireza, 8n, 12n, 201, 201n
Al-e Ahmad, Jalal, 117
Al-Farabi
argument regarding conflict between religion and philosophy, 111 on corrupt cities as a source of Tabatabai’s utilization, 102
Alijani, Reza, vii, 12n
Amanat, Abbas, 130n
Amir Arjomand, Said, 196n
Amirpur, Katajun
arguing that differentiating between the incidentally and essentials of Islam is mostly arbitrary, 86
An-Naim, Abdullahi Ahmed approach to sharia reformulation overlapping with Shabestari and Soroush’s strategies for reform, 195 arguing there are serious tensions between traditional fiqh and constitutionalism essentials, 193 being criticized by March as unorthodox, 52
being post-Islamist in the exact sense of the term, 11
on civic reason, 197
critique of sharia-based Islamic state being similar to Haeri’s, 139, 195n critique of the legal status of women and non-Muslims in traditional fiqh, 192–193
critique of velayat-e faqih in Iran’s Constitution, 192, 195, 198 differences between An-Naim’s and Rawls’s projects, 198
dividing Islam development into Mecca and Medina, and its implications for religious reform,
89, 194f
dual connotation of state’s religious neutrality in his theory, 85 empirical argument to support constitutionalism validity, for Muslim-majority contexts, 196–197
four principal arguments justifying the idea of a secular state, 197–198 ijtihad exercise in matters governed by Quran and Sunna texts, 193–194 on the institutional separation between Islam and state, 69, 85, 139 interpretation of abrogation (naskh), 195 Islam and liberalism reconciliation at Islamic law level, impossibility of,
53, 86
Islamic argument in favor of transformation in official Iranian public law, 179, 180

Note: Page numbers followed by “n” refer to notes.
An-Naim, Abdullahi Ahmed (cont.)
moral argument supporting constitutionalism validity in Muslim-majority context, 195 negative liberties protected by a secular state as pre-conditions for preserving positive freedom, 69, 139
Rawls on his sharia interpretation as example of reasonable comprehensive doctrines supporting public reason, 30n, 192–193
Ansari Shirazi, Yahya, 150
Arabia, 58, 71, 72, 87, 89, 143, 162, 194, 197
Aral, Berdal, vi
Aristotle, 128, 140
Asad, Talal, 59, 60
Asharites, 67, 68, 86, 87
Ashtiani, Jalal Addin, 95
Audard, Catherine, 50n
Avicenna. See Ibn Sina
Azerbaijan, 64

B
Badamchi, Meysam, 4n, 146n, 165n, 173n, 200n
Badkubei, Seyyed Hossein, 96
Baha ol-dini, Seyyed Reza, 150 Baier, Kurt, 34n, 104
on mutuality of utilization as test of universalizability to be met by contractarian theories, 104–105 on the difference between overlapping consensus and constitutional consensus, 34n Banisadr, Abolhasan, 85n Barry, Brian
on dividing theories of justice and implications, 108
Barth, Karl, 80
Bauer, Joanne, 73
Baur, Micheal, 30n
Bayat, Asef
conceptualizing Islamism, 2 conceptualizing post-Islamism, 1f factors influencing post-Islamism emergence in Iran, 3n formulation of post-Islamism criticized based on Sudan and Syria historical experiences, 1–2n on 2009 Green Movement as example of post-Islamist social transformation, 9n on post-Islamism advent not being necessarily the historical end of Islamism, 4 post-Islamism as condition and project, 2–3 on post-Islamism in Turkey under AKP rule, 4n on post-Islamists perceiving people as rights-bearing citizens than dutiful subjects, 2, 55
Beitz, Charles, 73
Bell, Daniel A., 73
Berlin, Isaiah, 69n
Bilgin, Mehmet Fevzi, 21n Boettcher, James, 2n Boroujerdi, Mehrzad, 9n
on nativist mindset of Iranian intellectuals in period between the 1953 coup and 1979 revolution, 117 Boroujerdi, Ayatollah, 115n, 123, 129
Bosetti, Giancarlo, vii
Brown, Wendy, 59
Bultmann, Rudolf, 74
Butler, Judith, 60n

C
CA (The Constituent Assembly), 185–187
Canada, 21
Christianity, 56, 152
Cizre, Umit, vi
Cohen, Joshua
on logic of two-stage interpretation of political liberalism, 21–22n on minimalist approach to human rights, 88n on relationship between truth and public reason, 169n Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Iran
An-Naim’s critique of embedding guardianship in the Constitution, 196 basic liberties protection and non-equality between jurists and non-jurists, 187–192 being mostly protective concerning socio-economic justice, 191 by declaring the Twelver Shia as official religion Article 12 violates freedom of conscience, 190 explaining failure of the reformist movement of Khatami’s era in terms of the contradictions inherent in the Constitution, 179 Haeri’s critique that Constitution embodies a logical contradiction by trying to be simultaneously pro-republican and pro-guardianship, 132, 196n historical note on how guardianship was entered into the Constitution, 85–187 inequality between jurists and non-jurists and insufficient protection of freedom of association, 191 inequality between jurists and non-jurists and insufficient protection of free speech, 190 leadership position, Guardian Council and jurists-dominated Judiciary as violators of fair value of political liberties principle, 187–189 the main challenge for the Iranian political system from the political perspective of political liberalism being the privileged political status given to Shia, 180 Moqaddam Maraghei’s argument in the Constitutional Assembly against structural change in the preliminary draft in favor of guardianship of the jurist, 186 necessity for and challenges regarding amending the Constitution, 98–203 objection that the Constitution should not be evaluated from a western liberal perspective and the response to this, 192 on the preliminary draft, 185 qualifications for occupying leadership position and unregulated powers of the Leader, 187–189 1989 revision of the Constitution, 187–187
Shabestari’s distinction between jurisprudential and legal interpretations of the Constitution, and his argument that Islamic Articles should be interpreted in line with republican Articles, 187, 198–199
Copp, David, 107n, 170n
Cornell, Vincent, 34n
CRC (Council for the Revision of the Constitution), 186, 187, 199 Cudd, Ann
arguing that success of the social contract in securing cooperative interaction requires that the parties be free of envy, jealousy, and spite, 105 on origins of the term contractarianism, 107–108

D
Dabashi, Hamid, 201n
Dabbagh, Mohammad Hossein, 99n
Dabbagh, Soroush, vii, 74n, 78n, 86n, 97n comparison between M. H. Tabatabai and Wittgenstein’s meta-ethical theories, 99n critique of Malekian from a Soroushian perspective, 156n critique of Shabestari’s non-cognitivist account of faith, 68–69 defining post-Islamism as critique of jurisprudence from a moral perspective, 7, 7n using Ross’s theory of prima facie duties to justify our moral duty to be liberal-democrats, 157n Dallmayr, Fred
comparative elaboration of Soroush and An-Naim theories, 85n on comparative political theory, 45n Daniels, Norman
arguing that wide reflective equilibrium as Rawls’ most enduring legacy in political philosophy, being at the core of methodological Rawlsianism of contemporary Anglo-American political theory, 27
Darwall, Stephen, 104
Darwin, Charles
Tabatabai’s utilization (estekhdam) being rooted in his biological laws, 102
Davari Ardakani, Reza, 97n
Dignitatis Humanae, 30n, 31n Dombrowski, Daniel A. arguing that to enter the original position involves a certain humility that is admirable from a religious perspective, 111 degree of abstraction away from our theological values in selecting the principles of justice is necessary to appreciate the respect for all people created by God, 111
Duran, Burhanettin, vi

E
El-Affendi, Abdelwahab, 2n Eshkevari, Hasan Yousefi, vii, 12n, 87n account of Bazargan’s view on religious democracy, 83n Eshkevari, Hasan Yousefi (cont.)
reading of Shia and Mutazila theology as exemplifying an Islamic approach to natural law, 87

Estlund, David
on Malekian’s normative epistemic authoritarianism, 170

Euben, Roxanne. L., 116

F
Fadel, Mohammad, vi, 19n, 139n on hudud and political liberalism, 139 on political liberalism and non-liberal religious views, 18–19, 18n on pre-19th century Sunni theological and ethical doctrines, and public reason, 50n

Fanaei, Abolghasem
argument that secular morality is ontologically prior to Islamic jurisprudent, 7 contribution to religious intellectualism project, 8n critique of foundations of the ‘Islamic’ idea of human rights, 78n defining post-Islamism as critique of jurisprudence from a moral perspective, 7 distinction between jurisprudence within boundaries of morality and morality within boundaries of jurisprudence, 7, 78n
interpretation of molazeme principle, 111–112n on moral falsifiability of jurisprudential fatwas, 7 non-jurisprudence-centered approach to conjecture, similar to Soroush and Shabestari, 57

Farasatkah, Maqsud, 142

Ferrara, Alessandro, vii, 11, 31, 41–45, 47, 113, 169n, 170n, 171n, 202n, 203n arguing that not all forms of democratization amount to westernization, 203 on autonomy of politics in political liberalism and place of truth, 169, 171 on constitutional reform as manifestation of democratic politics at its best, 202 critique of Hobbesian and neo-Kantian liberalisms for being unable to sufficiently endorse pluralism in modern societies and reflexive pluralism/conjecture as remedy, 42 defining hyperpluralism as outcome of massive immigration, the intrinsic dynamism of civil society and religious evolution in Europe, 34 interpretation of conjecture, 43–45 on the meaning of public and private, 169 on multiple democracies, 77, 77n, 203 multivariate democratic polity for post-Islamist Muslim-majority societies, 36 questioning the mainstream interpretation of Rawls through reading Political Liberalism under the inspirations taken from The Law of the Peoples, 35–36

Firahi, Davud, 114n
Freeman, Samuel, 11n, 22n, 30n, 110n
Friedman, Marilyn, 25n
Fürstenbergand, Nina zu, vii

G
Gadamer, Hans-Georg, 8, 74, 80
Galston, Miriam, 25n
Ganji, Akbar, vii, 12n critical debate with Soroush on ‘prophetic dreams’ as Soroush’s latest theory of revelation, 200n on Malekian’s priority of culture thesis, 155, 155n on the necessity of constitutional reform, 199–200, 199–200n Gauthier, David
comparison between his and Rawls’s theories of justice, 107n Hobbesian contractarianism being partially similar to Tabatabai’s contract, 107n

Ghamari-Tabrizi, Behrooz, 9n
Ghaneirad, Mohammad Amin, 80
Gharavi Esfahani, Sheykh Mohammad Hossein, 96, 141, 141n Ghazali, Abu Hamid, 60 Ghobadzadeh, Naser
defining post-Islamism as endorsing religious secularity, 5

Gibbard, Allan, 104n
Gorji, Monire, 185
Green Movement, 8–9n, 53n, 74, 83, 84n, 200–202, 201n
Gregory, Eric, 113
Guardian Council of the Constitution, 77, 188, 189
Guardianship of the Jurist, 26, 53n, 127, 129–133, 130n, 135, 137, 138, 139n, 144, 158, 167, 185–188, 199

H Habermas, Jurgen
on distinction between public and private autonomies, 156n ideal discourse situation and Rawls's wide reflective equilibrium, similarity between, 8n idea of post-secularism implying with arguing that post-Islamism requires a constant critical dialogue between tradition and modernity, 5 idea of post-secularism implying that success of the post-Islamist project depends on mutual understanding between religious and secular citizens on Rawls's idea of reasonableness, 5n on Rawls's ideas of stability and overlapping consensus, 32–33n Rousseau's general will, and distinction between private and public autonomies, 145–146

Habibi, Hasan, 185
Hadji Haidar, Hamid
arguing that Rawl's notion of decent hierarchical people is sufficient normative guideline for Muslim-majority societies, and its critique, 20f Haeri. See Haeri Yazdi, Mehdi Haeri Yazdi, Mehdi
agency contract, development of, 134–135 answer to his objection of Rousseau's general will based on Rawls's reading of Rousseau, 144f arguing for conjecture from the perspective of traditional Iranian-Islamic philosophy, 11, 123–124 argument for non-oppressive nature of sharia, 138f argument that God's justice demands that contemporary Muslim states should be just, 143 being among the forerunners of dialogue between Islamic philosophy and western philosophy, 124n being a religious intellectual, 242 being one of the main representatives of traditional Islamic philosophy in contemporary Iran, 95, 123–124 being similar to Malekian in adopting moral intuitionism, 160–161 biography, 123
comparison with Shabestari in the claim that the government established by the Prophet in Medina also respected democracy and liberal rights, 143 comparison with Shabestari in using the conceptions common in Islamic transactions to develop a political theory compatible with the essentials of liberalism, 143 comparison with Shabestari on the place of Islamic philosophy, 142–143 comparison with Shabestari on the place of justice in Islamic teaching, 143 constitution as the official text stipulating the agency contract, 133 contrasting views to M. H. Tabatabai on relationship between practical and theoretical reasoning, 140–141 critique of Andrew March's jurisprudence-centered view of conjecture, 129 critique of pro-guardianships' interpretation of fiqh based on Molla Sadra's philosophy, 132 critique of Rousseau's general will, 144–146 critique of the guardianship (velayat) as incompatible with considering persons as reasonable and rational, 129f defense of moral realism and intuitionism in the first part of Hekmat va Hokumat is not necessary for endorsing his political theory, 141 defining meaning of hekmat and its branches, 128 differentiating between koll and kolli and its implications, 136–137 division of 'being' into unwilled and entities; while theoretical philosophy is concerned with unwilled entities, practical philosophy studies willed entities, 128 elaborating political meaning of velayat in contrast to hokumat, 129 Haeri Yazdi, Mehdi (cont.)
endorsing political secularism but rejecting philosophical secularism, 138–139 exclusive and joint ownerships, development and definition of, 133–135 favouring individualism against collectivism, 144–146 government as agency of joint private owners theory, 133–136
Hekmat va Hokumat as a theory of natural rights, 135
Hekmat va Hokumat, including the fundamental ideas of society as a fair system of cooperation and persons as free and equal citizens, 125f, 125n Hekmat va Hokumat satisfies Rawlsian criteria of reasonableness and rationality, 123–146 implementation of political leadership rights of the Infallible Imams and the prophet in Shia, 131–132 interpretation of molazeme principle, 132 Islamic Republic, as self-contradictory term, 132, 196n on Kant’s distinction between synthetic and analytic, 140 linguistic definition of hokumat in Persian and Arabic, 128 meta-ethics, 140–142
morality as a priori synthetic, 140 Muslim political theory, and hekmat, 128–129 not being an Islamist from beginning, 123 practical reasoning, as sub-branch of theoretical reasoning, 140–141 priority of Islamic Philosophy over Islamic Jurisprudence thesis, 127–128 rejecting ultra-nationalism, 137n using traditional Islamic philosophy and jurisprudence notions of joint private ownership and agency contract to develop a reasonable contract theory compatible with political liberalism, 124f view of state of nature, 133–135
Hajarian, Saeed, 12n
Hashas, Muhammed, 83n
Hashemi, Ahmad, vi, 10n, 189n
Hashemi, Mohammad Mansour, 74n, 80n, 118n
Hashemi, Nader, 21, 32n, 189–190n
Hedrick, Todd, 28n
Heidegger, Martin, 58, 74, 80
Hobbes, Thomas, 133n
Hume, David
on circumstances of justice, 99–100, 160 idea that moral statements are logically independent of theoretical propositions being rejected by Haeri but accepted by Tabatabai, 140–141 notion of artificial virtues inspiring us to translate the Persian edrakat-e eterbari as artificial conceptions, 98, 98n and other modern philosophers’ efforts have undermined the epistemological foundations of traditional Islamic philosophy, 143

I
Ibn Sina, 127
Iran. See also Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Iran; See also individual entries post-revolutionary Constitution, post-Islamic critique of, 179–203 Iraq, 3, 114, 201
Islam, 1, 2, 4–8, 11, 13, 18, 19, 26, 33, 45, 48, 49, 51–58, 60, 63–66. See also individual entries
Italy, vi

J
Jackson, Sherman A. arguing that US Muslims need to adopt the US constitution simply as a modus vivendi, 35
Jahanbakhsh, Forough, 9n, 83n, 114n, 115n, 118n Jahanbegloo, Ramin, vii, 201–2n Jalaeipour, Hamidreza, 8n Javadi Amoli, Abdallah
advocating velayat by appointment, 189n exchange with Haeri on the foundations and implications of the guardianship of the jurist, 139
Islamist idea of human rights and Shabestari’s reaction to that, 77
Judaism, 56

K
Kabasakal Badamchi, Devrim, vii, 165n
Kachuyan, Hossein, 172n
Kadivar, Mohammad Ali, 6n, 11, 12n, 41, 53n, 55–59, 68, 79, 96, 116, 124n, 130n, 192n, 200n

Kadivar, Mohsen
initially adopting a jurisprudence-centered approach to conjecture, 55–56 Islamic justification for freedom of religion and belief in Islam, 55–57 recently tending to argue for the compatibility of Islam and liberal-democratic values in a way similar to Soroush, Shabestari and Fanaei, 57–59 on structural ijtihad, 57–59

Kamrava, Mehran, 9n

Kant, Immanuel, 11, 20, 23, 31n, 69, 78, 113, 125, 140, 143, 152, 152n, 162, 162n

Katouzian, Naser, 186n, 199n

Kaul, Volker, vii

Kazanistan, 20, 88, 89, 192, 198

Kazemian, Morteza, 84

Kelly, Erin, 25, 25n

Khameh, Armin, vi

Khansari, Seyyed Abolqasem, 96

Khatami, Seyyed Mohammad, 12n, 179, 199–202

Khomeini, Seyyed Ruhollah disagreement with Montazeri on absolute guardianship of the jurist, 53n, 192n guardianship of jurist theory and its constitutional implications, 129–130, 185–188 Haeri’s critique of his guardianship of the jurist theory, 130f post-Islamism being related to sociological transformation of post-Khomeini Iran, 1, 3 on removal of marjaiyat from the requirements for Supreme Leadership, 187 Khosrokhavar, Farhad, 9n, 201n

Kierkegaard, Soren
impact of his view on subjective truth of religious beliefs on Malekian’s spirituality thesis, 167

Klosko, George, 34n

Koleyni, Yaqub, 131, 131n

Krasnoff, Larry, 33, 108

Kuhkamari, Hojjat, 96

Kuhn, Steven, 202

Kuhn, Thomas, 202

Kukathas, Chandran, 20n, 22n

Kurzman, Charles, 29n, 198n

Kymlicka, Will, vi, 21n, 105n, 135n, 173n, 192n arguing that the idea of a decent hierarchical people is based on the millet system of the Ottoman Empire with an insufficient conception of religious toleration, 192 critique of aggregative or vote-centric democracy from a deliberative democrat perspective, 173 discussion of public and private, 169n equal concern for individuals constitutes the common basis of contemporary varieties of Anglo-American political theory, 135 on postcolonial liberalism and its implications for post-Islamist theory, 21

L

Lakatos, Imre, 142, 142n
Lamarck, Jean-Baptiste, 101–102
Larmore, Charles, 30n
Leader. See Supreme Leader

Leman, Oliver, 86n, 128, 128n

Locke, John
influence of his view on the relationship between reason and revelation on Malekian’s spirituality thesis, 152
LUISS University, v, vi

M

Maffettone, Sebastiano, vi, 30n, 109n, 110n on burdens of judgment, 25n interconnected reading of A Theory, Political Liberalism and The Law of Peoples, 22n Rawlsian reaction to post-colonial, post-modernist critiques of liberalism, 60n

Mahdavi, Mojtaba
2009 Green Movement, as example of post-Islamist social transformation in Iran, 8n on Montazeri as the most prominent quasi-post-Islamist jurist, 53n on neo-Shariaties’ discourse as an important genre of post-Islamist thought, 12n on parallels and differences between Islamism and post-Islamism, 4–5 Mahdavi, Mojtaba (cont.)
post-Islamism, reinvention of the tradition and alternative modernity, 5 reinterpreting Ali Shariati as a radical democrat, 118n success of post-Islamist project depends on developing a mutual understanding between religious and secular citizens, 5 unintended consequence of Khomeinist Islamic state was transforming the people from subjects into citizens, 3

Mahmood, Saba, 59
Malekian, Mostafa
apoliticism and its critique, 174, 174n arguing that religious state is like a laboratory testing the claims of religion, 3–4 argument for only legitimate case for an Islamic state, 167 being influenced by Lock’s theory of reason and revelation, 152 being influenced by Ross’s moral theory, 157, 161 bio­graphy (intellectual journey from Islam­ism to traditionalism, religious modernism and spiritualism), 150 on burdens of judgment, 158 challenge of Condorcet’s jury theorem for his view of toleration, 170–171 common assumptions between his spirituality thesis and the traditional religion, 152–153 comparison between Malekian and Abdolkarim Soroush’s approaches to moral and political autonomies, 156 cosmopolitan critique of nationalism (ontological and moral arguments), 161–162 critique of absolute guardianship of the jurist, 158 critique of his idea of toleration based on Rawls’s political liberalism, 168 critique of realism in international relations, 162 critique of religious intellectualism as a contradictory term and advocating spiritualist intellectualism, 153 critique of traditional Islamic philosophy, 110n defining modernity as committing oneself to the requirements of critical rationality, 150–151 on democracy and spirituality, 158 difference between former and latter Malekian on the relationship between religion and spirituality, 154 dividing human beliefs into objective in-principle, objective in-practice, and subjective, and its implications, 163 dividing religious beliefs into ontological, axiological and deontological, 166 endorsing an intuitionist attitude to normative ethics and politics, 160–161 on ethics of belief, 158 on expression of truth and diminution of suffering, as two prima facie duties of spiritual citizens and its implications, 154, 156–157, 163 on having authentic life, 159 justifying political secularism, 166–167 Malekian’s objection to Rorty’s thesis of the priority of democracy to philosophy and answer to that, 172 prioritizing of culture doctrine and its implications, 155, 173 rationality and spirituality thesis, 149f rejecting historicism in religion, 151 relationship between spirituality and happiness, goodness, and authenticity, 153 resemblance of Malekian’s critique of vote-centric democracy to deliberative democracy, 172–173 on social ethos of spiritual citizens, 156–162 spiritual citizens exhibit justice, benevolence and compassion towards minorities, 159–160 spiritual citizens prioritize their interests over their temporary joys, 159 spirituality and the Platonic ‘noble lies’ of populist demagogues, 159 spiritual virtues do not replace constitutional rights but complement them, 160 supporting the rule of experts in decision-making and its implications, 165–166, 170 on taabod and autonomy, 151 theory of toleration and its implications, 163–168 viewing both the subjects and objects of toleration as individuals, 164 on the virtue of being free from prejudice, dogmatism and fanaticism and their definitions, 158 on the virtue of offering rational arguments in favor of one’s preferences, 157 March, Andrew, vii, 2n, 11, 19n, 31, 34, 41–42, 45–60, 63, 64, 82, 85 to achieve a reasonable conjecture the comprehensive ethical doctrine in question should provide principled, rather than tactical or strategic, reasons for affirming liberal norms, 47–48 adopting a view of conjecture that goes beyond his earlier jurisprudence-centered approach in his critique of Mahmood and Asad, 59–60 approach to conjecture is less ambitious than Rawls’s own idea, 52 arguing that in the hearts and minds of ever-increasing numbers of Muslims, fiqh retains its authority in terms of the definition of rights and obligations, 48 arguing that political liberalism is superior to comprehensive liberalism because of its epistemic abstinence, 19, 45 arguing that the most plausible kind of conjecture is that which primarily relies on Islamic jurisprudence (adopting a jurisprudence-centered approach to conjecture), and its implications, 41, 48–49, 52 argument for plausibility of overlapping consensus between orthodox Sunni Islam and Rawls’s political conception of justice, 21–22n to base political liberalism’s normativity on the burdens of judgment makes genuine overlapping consensus difficult, 125n comparing his view of conjecture with that of Ferrara, 42f in conjecture one has to appeal to Islamic jurisprudence unless remaining at this level prevents the conflict from being resolved, 50–51 critique of An-Naim and Taha’s approach to religious reform, 52 diagnosis, evaluation and synthesize as three steps of operationalizing a conjecture, 47 interpretation of Rawls’s strategy to resolve moral conflicts, 49f interpreting conjecture (justificatory comparative political theory) as a justificatory tool to overcome moral conflict between liberalism and Islam, 45–48 moral argument for his first principle of conjecture, 52 moral conflict should be resolved only at the level of abstraction necessary, no more and no less, 49 on plausibility of conjecture, 45–46 post-Islamist intellectuals’ critique of March’s jurisprudence-centered approach to conjecture treatment of jurisprudence, 50–60, 85n, 86, 129 pragmatic argument for his first principle of conjecture, 49f sympathy as March’s third principle of conjecture, 47 three principles of March’s methodology of conjecture, 46 transparency and restraint as March’s second principle of conjecture, 46–47 view of conjecture partially resembling Kadivar and Montazeri’s approach, 55 Marchetti, Rafaelle, vi
Martin, Rex, 33n
Maududi, Abul Ala, 116
McPherson, Lionel, 25, 25n
Mecca, 10, 89, 194–195
Medina, 10, 89, 143, 163, 194–195
Melidoro, Domenico, vi
Mesbah Yazdi, Mohammad Taqi, 77, 150, 189
Meshkini, Ali, 187
Miandari, Hasan, 101n
Mill, John Stuart
arguing that a philosophical doctrine is not judged at all until it is judged in its best form, 11 liberalism being an example of conjecture, 31n society united on his utilitarianism (or other comprehensive liberalisms) requiring the sanctions of state power to remain so, according to Rawls, 78
Milo, Ronald, 108n
Mirdamadi, Yaser, vii, 10n Mirsepasi, Ali
inspirations from his critique of political Islam for the post-Islamism debate, 6–7
Mobasher, Mohammad, vii, 21, 21n, 73, 73n, 173n
Mohaghegh Damad, Mostafa, 124n
Mohammadpour, Daryoush, vi
Mohammad, the Prophet, 66, 68, 70, 75, 118, 132, 143
Mojahedi, Mohammad Mahdi, 79n Mojtahed Shabestari, Mohammad arguing that jurisprudence is nourished by epistemological, anthropological and sociological presumptions, 70f being influenced by the German philosophers and theologians of hermeneutics and existentialism, 74
biography, 64–5
on the burdens of judgment, 75 comparison with An-Naim, 193–6 comparison with Haeri Yazdi, 142–3 comparison with Soroush regarding unorthodox strategies for conjecture, 82–3, 86
critique of Tabatabai’s Islamism and his concept of law, 118–19
critique of the metaphysical idea of human rights in response to Javadi Amoli and Mesbah Yazdi’s
objections, 77
critique of the term Islamic democracy, 76, 83
critique of the traditional method of hermeneutics adopted by orthodox jurists, 74–76
critique of traditional Islamic philosophy for its Aristotelian metaphysics and being indifferent to socio-political realities, 143
differentiating between the jurisprudential and right-based interpretations of the Constitution, 185–6, 196–7 on different meanings of Islamic faith, 67
distinction between the essentials and incidental of Islam, 63–64, 70 on dividing Islamic jurisprudence into worship, transactions and politics, and evaluating the rationality of each, 71
following Popper’s distinction between who to rule and how to rule, 66n on the Green Movement, 8–9n, 74 on inability of political jurisprudence to address the fundamental questions of modern humans, 72
on the independence of justice from jurisprudence, 73
Islamic, full justification for liberal citizenship (see (Mojtahed Shabestari, Mohammad, unorthodox strategies for developing overlapping consensus between Islam and political liberalism)) on justice as an idea varying from era to era, 72–73
on the most important political theory question of Islamism, 66
on the necessity of free exchanges of ideas for ijtihad, 76
on negative and positive liberties, 69
a non-cognitivist approach to faith, 69 objection that assuming an idea of decency is necessary for the consistency of Shabestari’s theory, 88 objection to his faith and freedom of conscience argument, 87 objection to his lack of appropriate criterion to list the essentials of Islam, 86
political (constructivist) argument for human rights, 78
on promoting the oneness of God and following justice as the two most important goals of Mohammad’s prophethood, 70
reaction to March’s jurisprudence-centered approach to conjecture, 53, 55 some of the premises of Malekian’s spirituality thesis can be found in his critique of traditional Islamic theology, 153–4
on Soroush’s religious intellectualism and its critique, 79
that faith (iman) cannot flourish in an undemocratic atmosphere, 67 unorthodox view of ijtihad, 76 view of democracy being compatible with Ferrara’s idea of multiple democracies, 77
Montazeri, Hossein Ali
being a valiant voice in support of the Green Movement, 53n challenging the absolute guardianship of the jurist and advocating the notion of an elective
guardianship, 53n, 188n
exchange with Abdolkarim Soroush on the relevance of Islamic jurisprudence to the modern world, 53 Orthodox Shia justifications for political liberalism, 5 as quasi/semi-post-Islamist figure, 11–12, 102–103n, 341n Moqaddam Maraghei
speech in CA against structural change in the preliminary draft of the Constitution in favor of guardianship of the jurist, 186
Morshedi, Abolfazl, vi, 97
Mosaddegh, Mohammad, 117, 118
Mosleh, Ali Asghar, 97, 100
Mossadegh. See Mosaddegh, Mohammad Motahari, Morteza
arguing that Tabatabai’s theory of artificial conceptions was inspired by the views of Gharavi Esfehani in usul ul-fiqh, 141n influence on young Malekian, 150 interpretation of M. H. Tabatabai’s artificial conceptions theory, 95, 96, 100n, 102, 106, 141n objection that Tabatabai’s idea of utilization is nothing but egoism and the exploitation of the weak by the stronger, and the answer to that, 106
Mottaki, Mohsen, 65
Mouffe, Chantal
distinction between tradition and traditionalism, 5
Mousavi, Mir Hossein, 12n, 124n, 201, 201n, 202, 202n
Mozaffar, Mohammad Reza, 57, 141, 141n
Mulhall, Stephen, 73
Mutazila, 67, 68, 86, 86n, 87, 140

N
Naini, Mohammad Hossein, 96
Najaf, 96, 129
Namazi, Rasoul, vii
Naraghi, Arash, vii, 6n, 131 critique of Rawls’s minimalist approach to human rights in international relations, 88n minimalist approach to rationality in contrast to Malekian’s maximalist view of the reason, 156n minimalist philosophical secularism can be detected in Soroush’s projects, 6 moral critique of the guardianship of the jurist theory, 130n on place of Malekian in religious intellectual history, 154n on Tabatabai’s artificial conceptions theory, 97n view on relationship between morality and religion that is very similar to Fanaei’s, 8n Naraghi, Molla Ahmad, 130n, 131n, 135
Nasr, Seyyed Hossein
being an example of Islamic traditionalism, 5n categorizing Haeri as a traditionalist Islamic thinker and its problem, 142, 142n either offering no political theory or supporting a non-liberal form of government, 142 Nasr, Vali, 21
Nikfar, Mohammad Reza, vii, 13n argument that Rawls’s overlapping consensus paves the way for constructive dialogue between secular and religious intellectuals, 12–13
Nobahar, Rahim, vi
Norman, Wayne, 27

O
Okumuş, Ahmet, vi
O’Neill, Onora, 30n

P Paya, Ali
on definition of comparative philosophy and its implications for post-Islamist political theory, 10
Pellegrino, Gianfanco, vi
Pettit, Philip, 22n
Philpott, Daniel, 76, 197
Pickel, Andreas, 66n
Pierret, Thomas, 1n
Plato
arguing that human needs are so diverse and overwhelming that nobody can satisfy all of them individually, 103 idea of ‘noble lies’ and populist demagogues, 159 normative epistemic authoritarianism (the rule of experts), 170 Plato (cont.)
political liberalism has broken with his ‘myth of the cave,’ 169 views on Islamic philosophy, impact of, 127
‘who should rule?’, as central problem of politics, 66n
Pogge, Thomas, 20n
Pope Paul VI, 31n
Popper, Karl R.
condemning Plato for elevating the question of ‘Who should rule?’ into the central problem of politics, 9n influence on Soroush and other Iranian post-Islamist thinkers, 80, 80n possible critique of the traditional Islamic philosophers’ approach to epistemological certainty, 110

Q
Qazi, Mirza Ali, 96
Qom, 64, 95, 96, 117, 123, 124, 129
Queen’s University, vi
Quine, Willard Van Orman
influence on Soroush’s theory of expansion and contraction of religious knowledge, 81n
Quinn, Philip, 13n
Quong, Jonathan, 25
Quran (verses referred to in the text) al-Ahzab, verse, 72, 100, 106 al-Alaq, verses, 6–7, 100
al-Baqarah, verse, 213, 105, 114
al-Baqarah, verse, 251, 101, 104
al-Baqarah, verses, 178–179, 71 al-Fath, verse, 18, 132 Ibrahim, verse, 34, 100 al-Miraj, verses, 19–22, 100
al-Nisa, verses, 1–7, 11–25, 34, 92–93, 127–130, 176, 194
al-`Rad, verse, 11, 155n
Qutb, Seyyed, 116

An-Naim’s reformist interpretation of sharia, as example of overlapping consensus between Islam and political liberalism, 30n, 192 arguing that repressing people’s public discussions on constitutional reform may lead to subversive advocacy, 202
argument for freedom of association, 184 argument for freedom of political speech, 184
on the autonomous evolution of overlapping consensus and its problems, 34
autonomy of politics and its implications, 156n, 169f
being optimistic about reasonable nature of human beings, 18, 112–113 on circumstances of justice and dividing it into objective and subjective, 108–109
communitarian objection to universalistic account of justice in Theory and his response, 73n
conceptions of justification in Political Liberalism, 22f
concern for place of religion in politics in interview with Commonweal, 17 constitutional protection of freedom of conscience, political liberties, freedom of association and freedom of speech, 180–185
on political constructivism, 23–26, 24–25n, 98, 98n, 107–108, 108n
on contractualism and its relationship to religious reasoning, 107–114 critique of bringing truth into politics, 114, 169 definition of overlapping consensus as the most reasonable account of stability, 33f, 113
definitions of conjecture and declaration and their implications, 31–32, 41f distinction between basic liberties and their worth, and argument for the worth of political liberties, 183–184 earlier account of public reasoning, accused of being allied with secularization thesis in sociology of religion, and answer to that, 29, 113 on exclusion of unreasonable doctrines (both religious and secular) from political constructivism, 26, 28

R
Rafsanjani, Ali Akbar, 3
Railton, Peter, 105
Rasmussen, David, vii, 22n
Rathure, Aakash Singh, vi
Rawls, John
Alfred Stepan’s objection and Rawls’ response, 31–32
first principle of justice as fairness needs constitutional protection whereas the second principle of justice needs to be applied at the legislative level, 181 four-stage argument for constitutional basic liberties, 181 his approach in reading the classical writers, 11 his political liberalism being more compatible with the diversity of religious and secular views than comprehensive liberalisms, 18 on ideal theory, 34n idea of burdens of judgment and its implications for the post-Islamist theory, 8, 25, 25n, 44, 50n, 75–76, 78, 100, 109–110, 125, 125n, 158, 169 idea of decency (decent people) and its implications, 20, 21, 25n, 26, 35–36, 88–89, 192, 198 idea of rationality and its implications, 124f idea of reasonable, its definition and implications, 8, 25, 116, 123 idea of well-ordered society, its definition, and implications, 125n, 182, 202 interpretation of Rousseau’s general will, 144–146 interpretation of state of nature in classical contract theories, 133n justice as fairness as circumstances of impartiality theory of justice, 108 justification of liberal institutions can be extended to Muslim-majority context depending on comprehensive doctrine of the person in question, 26 just liberal-democratic constitution should embody the first principle of justice within its articles, 180–181 liberal principle of legitimacy, 138 moderate, universalistic reading of political liberalism, 21–22f on modus vivendi liberalism, 32–33, 42–43, 113 moral powers of citizens and their implications, 125, 180, 182, 184 original position, its definition and implications, 23–24, 111, 181–182 overlapping consensus as an action-guiding formula of reasonable stability in a world governed by perpetual peace, 33–34 parties in original position are inhabitants of our minds as ourselves inhabitants of liberal societies, decent states, benevolent absolutists, burdened societies or outlaw states, 24 place of conceptions of society and person in political constructivism, 26, 125–127 on pluralist persons (Muslims), 51–52, 78 political autonomy as not standing in opposition to the concept of truth as such, 171 political liberalism and democratization in Middle East, 17f, v political liberalism, and dialogue between non-religious and religious intellectuals, 12–13 political liberalism and evils of western colonialism, 21 political liberalism, as tool to interpret post-Islamism, 2, 12, 13, 17–36, 41, 42, 44–47, 50, 52, 59, 76–78, 83, 107, 109, 124–127, 135, 139, 149, 168–174, 182, 185, 192, 200n63 political liberalism initially being rooted in situation of Europe after the Wars of Religion, 33, 182 political philosophy and the defense of reasonable faith in the possibility of a just constitutional regime, 18 practical reasoning, strong and moderate readings of, 25f principle of equal basic liberties demands the equal participation of all citizens in writing the constitution, 181
Pro tanto justification, 31
Proviso to enter comprehensive conceptions of good into public discussions, 30 public reason as method of justification, defining, 29–30 public reasoning–comprehensive doctrines relationship (restrictive and inclusive), 28–30 real stability of political liberalism, as mixture of modus vivendi and overlapping consensus, 35 reasonable comprehensive doctrines, no matter in which society, are addressed by political liberalism, 25 Rawls, John (cont.)
reasonable Muslims and political constructivism, 26 reflective equilibrium (narrow and wide), and their differences, 27–28f reinterpreting the mainstream reading of stability in Political Liberalism under assumptions taken from The Law of the Peoples, 35–36 response to Sandel’s objection to original position as presented in Theory, 24 on similarities and differences between God’s reason and human reason, 112 stability of political liberalism in post-Islamist societies, 32f strategy to resolve moral conflicts through abstraction, 49–53 three arguments for freedom of conscience, 182–183 three features for comprehensive doctrines, 26, 51 two principles of justice as fairness (content), 180 two-stage interpretation of Political Liberalism, 21–22f on the United States as the primary context of Theory of Justice and Political Liberalism, 20 universalistic application of political liberalism to Muslim-majority societies, 19–20. Also (see individual entries) on veil of ignorance and its implications for religious freedom, 110–111 wide reflective equilibrium and political philosophers engagement to political philosophy, 27–28 wide reflective equilibrium being similar to Habermas’s ideal discourse situation, 28, 28n Razavi, Masoud, 124n
Raz, Joseph, 19, 200n
Reidy, David A., 21n
Rizvi, Sajjad, 86n
Roberts, Peri
arguing that different conceptions of society and person lead to different models of political constructivism, 24n on meaning of the term ‘construct’ for Rawls and O’Neill, 98n Rorty, Richard
anti-metaphysical perspective adopted by Mirsepasi in critique of Islamism, 9n argument for the priority of democracy to philosophy and Malekian’s reaction to that, 172 Ross, David
influence of theory of prima facie moral duties on Malekian, 157, 157n, 161
Rousseau, Jean-Jacques, 23, original position generalizes to a higher order of abstraction his theory (and those of other modern thinkers) of the social contract
Haeri’s critique of his account of the general will, 136f Rawls’s answer to Haeri’s critique of Rousseau, 144–145
Rumi, Jalal al-Din, 156

S
Sadeghi-Boroujerdi, Eskandar, 150n, 173, 174n
Sadek, Karim, vii
Sadra, Molla, 58, 67, 97n, 99n, 127, 131, 131n Sadri, Ahmad, vii
sociological study on the concept of intellectuals and intelligentsia, 7n Sadri, Mahmoud, vii, 80n distinction between ‘religious reformism’ and ‘religious reconstructivism’ as two approaches to reconcile Islam with modernity, 59n Salvatore, Ingrid, vi Sandel, Michael. J.
objection to original position as presented in Theory and Rawls’s response to it, 24
Santoro, Daniele, vi
Scanlon, Thomas. M.
on idea of reasonableness, 25, 126n Scheffler, Samuel
arguing that political liberalism fails to provide strong reasons for establishing democratic institutions in non-western societies, 19, 19n, 33
overview of Rawls’s on utilitarianism, 78n Schleiermacher, Friedrich, 74, 80 Schwartzman, Micah
on conjecture, 30
Şenel, Muzaffer, vi
Shabestari. See Mojtahed Shabestari Shariati, Ali
  his anti-colonial critique of liberal democracy and his advocacy of directed democracy, 117–118 neo-Shariaties’ discourse, 12n reinterpreting his political theory within the lines of radical democracy,
  118n, 213n
Shayegan, Daryoush
  considering M. H. Tabatabai and Haeri as the last of the traditional Iranian thinkers, 95
  defining post-Islamism in terms of distancing oneself from the ideologically religious religion, 6 Sheykh-e Eshraq. See Suhravardi
Shia Islam, 26, 66
Simmons, John, 34n
Sober, Elliott, 102
Socrates, 155–156
Soroush, Abdolkarim
  arguments for compatibility between Islam and constitutional democracy, 64 on artificial conceptions and place of M. H. Tabatabai in Islamic philosophy, 96
  being influenced by Popper, 66n, 80, 80n, 110
  as compared to An-Naim, 11, 53 as compared to Haeri Yazdi, 53 as compared to Kadivar, 11, 53 as compared to Shabestari, 11, 53 comparing him and Malekian on moral and political autonomies, 156 critical debate with Ganji on ‘prophetic dreams’ as his latest theory of revelation, 200n
  critique of pre-modern Islamic philosophers’ approach to epistemology and metaphysics, 109
  critique of traditional Islamic
  jurisprudence, 59–60
  on democratic religious government, 82 defining post-Islamism as post-ideological Islam, 6n distinction between duty-oriented and right-oriented sciences, 55 distinction between essentials and incidentals of Islam, 80 distinction between fiqih-based and moral states, 81
  distinction between intrareligious and extrareligious arguments, 83 distinction between political secularism and philosophical secularism, 83 his account of collective reasoning, 82 idea of a post-theocratic state, 83 on ijtihad, 54
  political ideas after the Green Movement, 83
  reaction to March’s treatment of
  jurisprudence, 53–60
  on religious Intellectualism and its implications, 12
  theory of expansion and contraction of religious knowledge and its
  implications, 64
  theory of religious pluralism (see (theory of expansion and contraction of religious knowledge and its
  implications))
  thesis of three types of religiosity (reflective, pragmatic, experimental) and its implications, 156 view on incontrovertible religious laws, 84 Sotude, Mohammad Taqi, 150
Stemplowska, Zofia, 34n Stepan, Alfred
  objection to Rawls’s political liberalism and Rawls’ response to that, 31–32
Stratton-Lake, Philip, 157, 161n
Sudan, 1n
Suhravardi, 127
Sunni Islam, 19, 200n
Supreme Leader, 129, 158, 192, 199
Swaine, Lucas, 19
Swift, Adam, 73
Syria, 114, 202

T
Tabatabai, M. H. See Tabatabai, Mohammad Hossein
Tabatabai, Mohammad Hossein arguing that Islamic political system mistakenly identified with either democracy or socialism and its implications, 115–116
  argument for justice and social cooperation overlapping with arguments of Sober and Wilson on the sources of unselfish behavior, 102 artificial conception of utilization, its origins and definition, 185f Tabatabai, Mohammad Hossein (cont.)
artificial conceptions not having a productive relationship with real conceptions, 141 artificial conceptions theory being an innovative doctrine within the tradition of Islamic philosophy, 96 attributing different types of objectivity to theoretical and practical reasonings, 99 being against presenting an independent philosophical criterion of reasonableness outside of Islamic revelation, 112, 115 being a realist in theoretical reasoning, 98 being a pioneer in the dialogue between the Islamic and modern philosophies, 6 being pessimistic about the nature of human beings, unlike Rawls, 112 biography, 96 change in artificial conceptions, 99 comparing Tabatabai’s contrarianism to Rawls’s contractualism and role of religion, 107f considering people as merely rational, only becoming reasonable after exposure to religious learning, 111 constructivist approaches to justice, advocating, 107 contractarian reading of Tabatabai’s artificial conceptions, 103f critique of western imperialism, 104, 116 dividing human conceptions into real and artificial conceptions and the definition of each, 97–100f edrakat-e eterbari as artificial conceptions, translation of, 97–100 equality in utilization (estekhdam), 103 exchanges with Haeri on theoretical dimensions of Islamic philosophy, 142n flexible versus fixed socio-political rules of Islam, 115–116 flourishing of human society depending on utilization, 101 had he remained alive for longer after the revolution, he might have been inclined towards a form of post-colonial liberalism that respected basic liberties, 118 having a simplistic view about the intellectual consensus in philosophical, moral and religious issues, 109 his artificial conceptions theory, 97–100f his theory being fully compatible with Rawls’s objective circumstances of justice, but only partially compatible with his subjective circumstances of justice (the burdens of judgment), 109 humankind, as inherently unjust and ignorant, 100, 106 individuals are unwilling to restrain their pursuit of utilization without the help of revelation, 105 interpretation of theological view of hosno qobh-e zati, 141 Islamist critique of secular law, 114 Islamist interpretation of Tabatabai, 114f justice and religion, compatibility of, 111, 116 on modus vivendi liberalism, 113 molazeme principle, interpretation of, 111 mutuality as test of universalizability, 104 origin of terms contractarianism versus contractualism, 107–108 oscillating between Contractarianism and an Islamic state, 114f philosophy of law, 105–106 on prisoner’s dilemma, 105 putting jurisprudence under the category of artificial conceptions and its implications, 99 Quran verses where Tabatabai discusses utilization in Almizan, 100 relationship between utilization and the artificial conceptions of ‘ought to’ and ‘choosing the easier and smoother option,’ 103 Shabetari’s critique of Tabatabai’s philosophy of law, 118–119 sharia as a justifier of natural rights in the post-Islamist interpretation of Tabatabai, 113 similarities between Tabatabai’s model of social contract and that of Hobbes, 03, 104 similarity between Tabatabai and Wittgenstein’s views of morality, 99 on society as a large community of social cooperation where the needs of all are satisfied by all, 103 Soroush’s critique of his pre-modern approach to epistemology and metaphysics, 109 on traumatic influence of western colonialism on the mentality of Iranian intellectuals, including Tabatabai, 117–119 by usuli Gharavi Esfehani and Mozaffar, who considered morality as rooted in the consensus of rational people, 141 utilization and the political theory of al-Farabi, 102 utilization is rooted in Darwinian laws of a struggle for existence and survival of the fittest or the Lamarckian law of adaptation to the environment, 101 utilization should not be confused with exploitation, 104 view of social contract being similar to Gauthier’s contractarianism, 107n work and personality used by both post-Islamist intellectuals and Islamist thinkers, 96 Tabriz, 96
Taha, Mahmoud Mohammed, 52, 193–195
Talebzade, Seyyed Hamid, 97n reading Tabatabai’s artificial conceptions through the lens of Molla Sadra’s notion of ‘existence towards completion,’ 99n Talisse, Robert, 30n
Tan, Kok-Chor, 20n
Tehran, 124, 150
Tillich, Paul, 80
Turkey, 1n, 4n
Twelve Shia Imams, 129, 131, 190

U
Ummah, 88, 89, 138, 188
United States, 1, 20, 34, 184, 198
US. See United States

V
Vahdat, Farzin

on Haeri’s Hekmat va Hokumat, 124n understanding post-Islamism in terms of the emergence of modern subjectivity in post-revolutionary Iran, 6, 6n Valentini, Laura, 34n
Vasmaghi, Sedigheh arguing that constitutional reform is essential part of any democratization project in Iran, 198–199 critique of fiqh being the measure of the legitimacy and illegitimacy of state laws in Iran, 199n Vatican II Council, 30n
Velayat-e faqih. See Guardianship of the Jurist
Von Vacano, Diego, 45n

W
Walzer, Michael communitarian objection to Rawls’s universalistic account of justice in Theory, 73n
Wenar, Leif arguing that Rawls’ earlier and later works have to be interpreted inter-connectedly, as a united whole, 22n arguing that the burdens of judgment are not easily acceptable for orthodox religious believers, 125–126
Wilson, Sloan, 102
Wolterstorff, Nicholas, 113n
World War I, 73
World War II, 18, 73, 96, 162

Y
Yaylali, Mustafa, vi
Yazdani Moghaddam, Ahmadreza, 96, 105n
Yenigün, Halil Ibrahim, vii

Z
Zakipour, Bahman, vi
Zamani, Mehdi, 108n
Zoroastrianism, 56