Kara Brown (Ph.D. Indiana University) is an Associate Professor of Educational Studies at the University of South Carolina. She researches educational equity and identity issues connected with schooling. Brown explores these themes through examinations of the socio-cultural context of language, the state's role in structuring educational opportunity, and international teacher migration. Much of her research focuses on Central and Eastern Europe with particular emphasis on Estonia. Brown teaches international and comparative education, social foundations of education, and qualitative research methods at the university's College of Education. Email: brownk25@mailbox.sc.edu

Renée DePalma received her PhD in 2003 from the University of Delaware (USA), where she helped to establish La Red Mágica, a community-university collaborative project that aimed to promote intercultural relationships between university students and minority children in an urban Latin American community center. Her doctoral thesis was based on a year-long ethnographic study in a dual language (Spanish-English) Kindergarten. She has been working at the University of A Coruña, in Spain, since 2010, and is also an honorary professor in the School of Education at the University of Kwazulu-Natal (South Africa). Her research and teaching has focused on equalities and social justice in terms of race, ethnicity, language, sexuality and gender. She is mainly interested in the social construction of marginalization within and beyond schools, ways in which success and failure are co-constructed in institutional settings, and the design of counter-hegemonic institutional contexts and classroom practices. Her publications include Language use in the two-way classroom: Lessons from a Spanish-English bilingual Kindergarten (Multilingual Matters, 2010) as well as articles published in journals including the International Journal of Bilingual Education and Bilingualism, Teaching and Teacher Education, and Linguistics and Education.
