Ayse Akalin is an assistant professor of Sociology in the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences at Istanbul Technical University, Turkey. She received her BA in sociology and in Political Science at Boğaziçi University, Turkey. She earned her Doctorate in Sociology at the City University of New York (CUNY), Graduate Center. Her research concentrates on the irregular status of migrant domestic workers in Turkey and its translation into available affective labor. Her fields of interest include migration and border studies, transnational feminist theory, and sociology of the body.

Grace M. Cho is an associate professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the CUNY, College of Staten Island. She is author of Haunting the Korean Diaspora: Shame, Secrecy and the Forgotten War (Minnesota 2008). Her current work focuses on food and memory and has been published in Gastronomica, Meatpaper, Contexts, and Qualitative Inquiry.

Deirdre Conlon is lecturer in Critical Human Geography at the University of Leeds and a member of the Asylum-Network (http://asylum-network.com) research group. She has also taught at a number of private liberal arts colleges in the United States. Conlon’s work engages the tensions around migration and policies and practices designed to manage immigration, including immigration detention, everyday enforcement practices, and the legal and governmental frameworks that gird citizenship and immigration. Her work typically engages participatory and community-based research practices. She is currently working on a project examining “intimate economies” of migrant detention in the United States. Among her recent publications are journal articles in Annals of the Association of American Geographers, Citizenship Studies, and ACME: An International E-Journal for Critical Geographies, as well as several book chapters. She is coeditor of Carceral Spaces: Mobility and Agency in Imprisonment and Migrant Detention (Ashgate 2013).

Melissa Hope Ditmore is a consultant specializing in issues of gender, development, health, and human rights, particularly as they relate to marginalized populations such as sex workers, migrants, and people who use drugs. She is currently working for the International Council of AIDS Service Organizations and the Civil Society Working Group on HIV in the Post-2015 Development Agenda. She has extensive experience working for international agencies and non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Asia and Africa. Her books include Encyclopedia of Prostitution and Sex Work (Greenwood Press 2006) and a history of prostitution in the United States (2011). She is writing a history of forced labor in the United States.

Laura Fantone currently teaches at the University of California Berkeley, and at the San Francisco Art Institute in the Gender and Women’s Studies and the Urban Studies programs. Laura holds a PhD in Sociology and a certificate in Gender and Women’s Studies from the CUNY Graduate Center. She grew up in a small village in the Italian Alps, and moved to the city of Bologna, as a teenager, where she went to college, getting a double major in political science and sociology. In her twenties, she stubbornly embraced feminist politics and interdisciplinarity, paying the full price for such decisions, with no regrets. She published on gender and precarity in Feminist Review, on videogames in Feminist Theory and Digital Creativity, and edited a mini-book series on gender and contemporary global resistance.

Deborah S. Gambs is an assistant professor of Sociology at the Borough of Manhattan Community College, CUNY. She was raised in Iowa and lives in Queens, New York. Her research draws on experimental and narrative personal writing, combined with social theory and has published in Qualitative Inquiry, Socialism & Democracy, and Cultural Studies <=>Critical Methodologies. She also uses feminist and visual approaches to look at the confluence of art, nature, technology, and culture. Her PhD is from the Graduate Center at CUNY. Together with Rose M. Kim she is coeditor of On the Role of Public Higher Education: Personal Reflections from CUNY’s Graduate Center (Palgrave Macmillan 2015).

Jean Halley earned her doctorate in sociology at the Graduate Center of the CUNY, and her master’s degree in theology at Harvard University. She is an associate professor of sociology at the College

Angelique Harris is assistant professor of Sociology in the Department of Social and Cultural Sciences at Marquette University. She received her doctorate from the Graduate Center, CUNY. Dr. Harris’ research and teaching interests include the sociology of health and illness, race and ethnicity, gender and sexuality, sociology of religion, urban studies, media studies, and social movements. Most of her research centers on the impact that sociocultural factors have on the health and well-being of minority groups. She is the author of the books, AIDS, Sexuality, and the Black Church: Making the Wounded Whole (Peter Lang 2010) and Writing for Emerging Sociologists (Sage 2013).

Robin G. Isserles is an associate professor of Sociology at the Borough of Manhattan Community College of CUNY. Her current research is on first-year community college students and the institutional challenges they encounter. Other areas of research include the Sociology of Teaching and Learning, with a particular focus on online instruction and pedagogy, as well as feminist theories on Carework and the Ethic of Care.

Hosu Kim is an assistant professor of Sociology at the College of Staten Island, CUNY. Her research interests include media theories, feminist methodologies, critical Korean studies, and cultural Studies. She is currently working on a book manuscript, Virtual Mothering: Birthmothers and Transnational Adoption Practice in South Korea.

Rose M. Kim is an assistant professor of sociology at the Borough of Manhattan Community College/CUNY. She received a BA in Art & Design from The University of Chicago in 1990 and a PhD in sociology from the Graduate Center/CUNY in 2007. Prior to graduate school she worked as a reporter at New York Newsday and the Los Angeles Times, as well as freelancing for various publications. She was part of a team of journalists and photographers that won a Pulitzer Prize for its coverage of the 1992 LA riots/insurrection/saigu, an event she re-examined in her dissertation thesis. Her research areas include racialization, mass media discourse and public higher education. She has published in Ethnic and Racial Studies, Socialism and Democracy, and Amerasia Journal.

Jennifer Pastor, assistant professor of psychology at the Borough of Manhattan Community College, received her BA in Psychology from Lehman College of CUNY, her en route MA in Psychology from Hunter College of CUNY, and her PhD in Social-Personality Psychology from the CUNY Graduate Center. Her research areas include social and cultural psychology with a focus on social and personal identity issues in acculturation and transitional stress among war veterans. She is also interested in the effectiveness of mind-body holistic treatments in the reduction of stress.

Michelle Ronda is an assistant professor of Criminal Justice at the Borough of Manhattan Community College, CUNY. She has taught in Marymount Manhattan College’s Bedford Hills College Program in the maximum security prison for women for many years. She has an abiding intellectual interest in questions of justice, in its theoretical and practical applications, alongside a commitment to engaging in applied research in urban, public settings. Among her current research interests are the impacts of college courses in prison, with both incarcerated and non-incarcerated students; social movements for change in the United States’ criminal justice system; and changing public perceptions of corporate and state surveillance. She earned her PhD in Sociology from the Graduate Center of CUNY.

Alia Tyner-Mullings is an assistant professor of sociology and founding faculty member at Stella and Charles Guttman Community College, CUNY. Her research and teaching interests include race, class, and gender, cultural studies, research methods, education, and statistics and deviance. Her books include Critical Small Schools: Beyond Privatization in New York City Urban Education Reform (IAP 2012), Writing for Emerging Sociologists (Sage 2013) and Enter the Alternative School: Critical Answers to Questions in Urban Education (Paradigm 2014).
