CONTRIBUTORS

Madeline Bassnett is assistant professor at the University of Western Ontario. Her articles on Mary Wroth can be found in Modern Philology, Studies in English Literature, and English Studies in Canada. Her current book project, Women, Food, and Nation in Early Modern England, explores the language of food and food rituals in relation to emerging and established regional, national, and transnational identities in early modern women’s writing.

Ilona Bell, Clarke Professor of English at Williams College, is the author of Elizabethan Women and the Poetry of Courtship and Elizabeth I: the Voice of a Monarch and the editor of Penguin’s John Donne: Selected Poems and John Donne: Collected Poems. She has won ACLS, NEH, Mellon, and Bunting fellowships and sits on the boards of the International Sidney Society and English Literary Renaissance. Her numerous essays on English Renaissance poetry include “‘A too curious secrecie’: Wroth’s Pastoral Song and Urania,” winner of the Gerald J. Rubio Prize, and “‘Joy’s Sports’: The Unexpurgated Text of Mary Wroth’s Pamphilia to Amphilanthus.” With Steven May, she is currently preparing an edition of “Pamphilia to Amphilanthus” containing both the manuscript sequence and the revised, expurgated printed text.

Sheila T. Cavanagh, founding director of the World Shakespeare Project (www.worldshakespeareproject.org), is professor of English and Distinguished Teaching Scholar at Emory. She also held the Masse-Martín/NEH Distinguished Teaching Professorship. Author of Wanton Eyes and Chaste Desires: Female Sexuality in The Faerie Queene and Cherished Torment: The Emotional Geography of Lady Mary Wroth’s Urania, she has published widely in the fields of pedagogy and of Renaissance literature. She is also active in the electronic realm, having directed the Emory Women Writers Resource Project (womenwriters.library.emory.edu) since 1994 and serving for many years as editor of the online Spenser Review.

Rebecca L. Fall is a doctoral candidate in the Department of English at Northwestern University. She is currently writing a dissertation on nonsense, near-nonsense, and other kinds of semantic obscurity in relation to emergent forms of popular culture in sixteenth- and seventeenth-century England.
Nona Fienberg has served since 1991 at Keene State College as professor and chair of the English Department and then as dean of Arts and Humanities for nine years. She publishes in Renaissance Studies, Women’s Studies, Holocaust Literature, the profession, and higher education. Awarded Whiting, NEH, Folger, and New Hampshire Humanities Council fellowships, she recently earned a fellowship in the Institute for the Study of Jewish Civilization and the Holocaust at the University of London, Royal Holloway. In 2012, she joined the Holocaust and Genocide Studies Department at Keene State College.

Margaret P. Hannay, professor of English Literature emerita, Siena College, is the author of two Sidney biographies, Philip’s Phoenix: Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke (Oxford University Press, 1990) and Mary Sidney, Lady Wroth (Ashgate, 2010), which won the Book of the Year Award from the Society for the Study of Early Modern Women. In 2013 she received the Jean Robertson Lifetime Achievement Award from the International Sidney Society. She has edited seven volumes of Sidney works with Noel Kinnamon and Michael Brennan and is currently working with Michael Brennan and Mary Ellen Lamb on the forthcoming Ashgate Research Companion to the Sidneys (1500–1700).

Clare R. Kinney is associate professor of English at the University of Virginia. She is the author of Strategies of Poetic Narrative: Chaucer, Spenser, Milton, Eliot (1992) and has edited Ashgate Critical Essays on Women Writers in England, 1550–1700, Volume IV: Mary Wroth (2009). Her other publications include articles on Wroth, Philip Sidney, and Mary Sidney Herbert, on Spenser and Shakespeare, and on medieval and early modern romance.

Mary Ellen Lamb is professor emerita at Southern Illinois University. She has published widely on early modern women poets and on Shakespeare in such journals as English Literary Renaissance, Shakespeare Quarterly, Shakespeare Survey, and Criticism. In addition to numerous anthologies such as Staging Early Modern Romance and Oral Traditions and Gender in Early Modern Literary Texts, her books include Gender and Authorship in the Sidney Circle, The Popular Culture of Shakespeare, Spenser, and Jonson, and an abridged version of Mary Wroth’s Countess of Montgomery’s Urania. She is currently the editor of the Sidney Journal and is on the editorial board of English Literary Renaissance.

Katherine R. Larson is associate professor of English at the University of Toronto. She is the author of Early Modern Women in Conversation (Palgrave, 2011) and coeditor, with Leslie C. Dunn, of Gender and Song in Early Modern England (Ashgate, 2014). Her work has appeared in journals including English Literary Renaissance, Milton Studies, the Sidney Journal, and Early Modern Women: An Interdisciplinary Journal, as well as in a number of essay collections. She is currently writing a book that integrates her training as a singer in its exploration of the affective function of song performance and of the singing body in early modern literature and culture.

Naomi J. Miller is professor of English and the Study of Women and Gender at Smith College. Her scholarship includes Changing the Subject: Mary Wroth and Figurations of Gender in Early Modern England (University Press of Kentucky, 1996), a coedited collection (with Gary Waller), Reading Mary Wroth: Representing Alternatives in Early Modern England (University of Tennessee Press, 1991), as well as numerous essays on Wroth. She has recently completed a historical novel, provisionally entitled The Tale-Teller, that re-imagines the story of Mary Wroth for a modern audience. She has coedited (with Naomi Yavneh) several Ashgate collections of essays on early modern women’s roles and family identities and has edited Reimagining Shakespeare for Children and Young Adults (Routledge, 2003).

Paul Salzman is professor of English Literature at La Trobe University, Australia. He has published widely on early modern literature, especially on prose fiction, women’s writing, and literary and cultural history. Recent work includes Literature and Politics in the 1620s: “Whisper’d Counsell” (Palgrave, 2014) and online editions of Mary Wroth’s poetry (wroth.latrobe.edu.au) and of Love’s Victory. He is currently working on nineteenth- and twentieth-century editors of Renaissance literature.

Kristiane Stapleton recently completed her doctorate at the University of Wisconsin–Madison and is a Houston Writing Fellow at the University of Houston. She has published articles on Aemilia Lanyer and Mary Wroth and is currently working on early modern female authors, generic innovation, and visual metaphors.

Andrew Strycharski teaches courses in Renaissance literature and culture, rhetoric, and media studies at Florida International University, where he also directs the film and media studies program. He currently serves as president of the International Sidney Society. He has published on the Sidney circle and early modern literature and culture in such journals as Criticism, SEL, and the Sidney Journal.

Beverly M. Van Note earned her doctorate at Texas A&M University and is an instructor at Temple College. Her ongoing research explores early modern women’s textual performances within a larger arena of representational forms, including the visual and the dramatic. In addition to her work here on Wroth, she has an article on Elizabeth Cary’s re-gendering of Abrahamic iconography in The Tragedy of Mariam forthcoming in Early Modern Women: An Interdisciplinary Journal.

Gary Waller, professor of Literature and Cultural Studies and Theatre Arts at Purchase College, SUNY, works primarily on the overlap of literature, theater, theology, and psychoanalysis. His books include Reading Mary Wroth: Representing Alternatives in Early Modern England; The Virgin Mary in Late Medieval and Early Modern Literature and Popular Culture; Walsingham and the English Imagination; Shakespeare’s All’s Well that Ends Well; The Sidney Family Romance: Mary Wroth, William Herbert and the Early Modern Construction of Gender; English Poetry in the Sixteenth Century; and Edmund Spenser: A Literary Life. He was the founder and first editor of the Sidney Newsletter. He is currently completing The Annunciation from Luke to the Enlightenment: A Cultural Study of Mary and the Annunciation: From Luke to the Enlightenment will appear in 2015. With Michele Osherow, he is starting on Making Shakespeare Mean: Shakespeare’s Daughters on the Contemporary Stage.

Georgianna Ziegler is Louis B. Thalheimer Associate Librarian and Head of Reference at the Folger Shakespeare Library. Before arriving at the Folger in 1992, she taught English literature at Davidson and Wofford Colleges and at the University of Pennsylvania, where she also served as Curator of the Furness Shakespeare Library. In addition to handling reference queries and tours at the Folger, she has curated a number of exhibitions including Shakespeare’s Unruly Women; Elizabeth I: Then and Now (both with catalogs); and Shakespeare’s Sisters: Women Writers, 1500–1700. She has published on Shakespeare’s heroines and his reception in the nineteenth century; on Esther Inglis; and on Elizabeth of Bohemia, part of her current project.
