ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In addition to the joy of spending the last few years rereading Jane Austen's novels, I now also get the pleasure of thanking the people who helped me in my explorations. One of the highlights of my journey with Jane was our presentation at the International Society for Eighteenth-Century Studies meeting in Montpellier, where the enthusiastic conversation of our audience helped to shape my ideas. And wonderful conversations about Austen were a biweekly treat in my seminars at the Free University of Berlin and the Alexander von Humboldt University, also in Berlin; my students were determined to contribute to this book, and I remember them and their work fondly.

A part of this book appears in the memorial volume for Paul Korshin, the 2008 edition of The Age of Johnson. Paul was not only one of the finest scholars of eighteenth-century literature and history but also the very best mentor and friend one could have had, and I miss him in all of these roles more than I can say.

Thanks go to the reader for the press, whose incisive comments on the manuscript were so helpful. My editors, Matthew Robison and Henry Whitney, have been adroit at clearing away hurdles before I could even ask them, and I appreciate their help at all the stages of the book's production. To my agent, Michele Rubin, I can only say thank you for everything.

And about my husband, Peter, a computer scientist who graciously has become expert on Jane Austen, I will repeat what I have said in earlier books: you are at the center of everything I do.
