

CINEMA, TECHNOLOGIES OF VISIBILITY, AND THE REANIMATION OF DESIRE

Cinema, Technologies of Visibility, and the Reanimation of Desire

Vincent J. Hausmann

palgrave
macmillan

CINEMA, TECHNOLOGIES OF VISIBILITY, AND THE REANIMATION OF DESIRE

Copyright © Vincent J. Hausmann, 2011.

Softcover reprint of the hardcover 1st edition 2011 978-0-230-11092-2

All rights reserved.

First published in 2011 by

PALGRAVE MACMILLAN®

in the United States—a division of St. Martin's Press LLC, 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10010.

Where this book is distributed in the UK, Europe and the rest of the world, this is by Palgrave Macmillan, a division of Macmillan Publishers Limited, registered in England, company number 785998, of Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 6XS.

Palgrave Macmillan is the global academic imprint of the above companies and has companies and representatives throughout the world.

Palgrave® and Macmillan® are registered trademarks in the United States, the United Kingdom, Europe and other countries.

ISBN 978-1-349-29349-0 ISBN 978-0-230-11850-8 (eBook)

DOI 10.1057/9780230118508

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Hausmann, Vincent J.

Cinema, technologies of visibility, and the reanimation of desire /

Vincent J. Hausmann.

p. cm.

1. Motion pictures—Psychological aspects. I. Title.

PN1995.H3945 2011

791.43'653—dc22

2010040664

A catalogue record of the book is available from the British Library.

Design by Newgen Imaging Systems (P) Ltd., Chennai, India.

First edition: April 2011

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Transferred to Digital Printing in 2012

For my mother, Mary Hausmann

Contents

List of Illustrations	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
1 Introduction: Cinema, Technologies of Visibility, and the Reanimation of Desire	1
2 Envisioning the (W)hole World “Behind Things” in Sam Mendes’s American Beauty	13
3 Burning Transmission: Stilling Psychic Space in Gore Verbinski’s The Ring	49
4 “Turning into Another Thing” in David Lynch’s The Elephant Man	105
5 Inscribing the Dream of Otherness in Wim Wenders’s Until the End of the World	157
6 Conclusion: Up with Dead People?	199
Notes	205
Selected Bibliography	219
Index	223

Illustrations

2.1–2.2	American Beauty's insistence that what the colonel and film viewers see barely conceals our identifications, repressions, and aggressions	23
2.3–2.5	Tracking American Beauty's ambivalent reading of its killing shot	32
3.1	Mother (Rachel) and son (Adan), incestuously bound, reproducing copies of Samara's deathly tape	70
3.2	Captures that summon conventional cinematic genealogies	71
3.3–3.4	The cinema in the eye of the Photomat's window	73
3.5	With her singular, avenging eye, Samara functions as a double for the protocinematic lighthouse	98
4.1	The animated still photograph: Merrick's mother coming to three-dimensional life	122
4.2	Moving across the sky depicted at the pantomime, the locket-like image of a horse	130
4.3	As a vehicle for examining cinema's relation to still photography, Merrick is here tracked as he rushes alongside unfolding frames of a (protocinematic) train	132
4.4	The camera's uneasy stitching of frames serves to derail cinema's arrival as a blank screen	133
4.5	Tracking an animating return	154

Acknowledgments

I am truly grateful to many people who made this book possible: Elaine Zickler, at the Psychoanalytic Center in Philadelphia, who offered generous, pointed critiques of early versions of two chapters, and whose gifts in traversing the worlds of clinic, theory, and artistic practice continually inspire; J.D. Trout, at Loyola University in Chicago, who helped sharpen the book's argument as well as my thinking (throughout the years); and the late Diane Garforth, whose intelligence and love are still cherished and, I hope, visible in these pages. The distinctive qualities of each of these friends seem more apparent and stirring as they yet unfold in other ways, places, and times. Special thanks to my mentors and co-editors at Bryn Mawr Review of Comparative Literature, Carol Bernstein and Azade Seyhan. I am particularly grateful for the chance to continue to work with scholars who have shaped my thinking and whose formidable depth and range of knowledge continue to challenge and dazzle. I owe a great debt of gratitude to other members of the Bryn Mawr set—Ruth Anolik, Kristin Lindgren, and Alex Pearson, as well as Sabina Sawhney and Simona Sawhney—for their encouragement and friendship, and to the late Phillip Kent and Eleanor Salotto, both of whom exhibited an eye for and a way of being in the world that are deeply missed.

I am indebted to Brigitte Shull, Lee Norton, Samantha Hasey, Heather Faulls, and Joanna Roberts at Palgrave Macmillan, as well as to the readers and copyeditors of the manuscript, for their fine, insightful, and helpful work toward the completion of this project. An early version of chapter 2 appeared in Camera Obscura Vol. 55 (January 2004). I am grateful to Duke University Press for their permission to reprint this material.

I would also like to thank colleagues at Furman University: Rich Letteri, Christina Buckley, Shelly Matthews, Chris Douglas, and Stan Crowe, who offered helpful comments on the project at its inception; John Beckford, Dean of Faculty, for generous release time that enabled me to revise the manuscript; Nick Radel for his friendship and his witty discussions of literature and theory over the years; Srdjan Smajic for his generous advice; and to those students who offer illumination in dark times and places. Thanks as well to Cort Haldaman (the most patient Academic Computing Specialist), Meagan Weaver, and the expert staff at the Center for Teaching and Learning for help with image retrieval. Most especially, sincere thanks to Terri Bright in the Art Department, whose photographic work solicits new ways of seeing the world (and photography, painting, and film) and whose steady encouragement and gift of friendship have been sustaining.

Finally, special thanks to my family, my sister, Valerie, and my cherished friends: Mary Leonard for her endless encouragement, her joy, and her artistic eye; and to Debra and Bill Jewell, for their creativity, unflagging support, and friendship.