Acknowledgments

Although most of the research and writing for this book was done at the University of Mainz, the core idea, structure-based foreign policy analysis, probably has its roots in my time at the University of Tübingen. My colleagues from Tübingen will detect the traces of our discussions in this book and I thank them for bringing me into this profession. The general ideas evolved into the core of this book at Mainz, where I worked with Herbert Dittgen, who sadly enough passed away before he could see this book finished. Following my time in Mainz I was lucky enough to join the Peace Research Institute Frankfurt, where I finalized this book. I thank my colleagues here for making this such a great place to work at. Gunther Hellmann supervised my dissertation at the Goethe University and I thank him not only for his advice during this time but also for his post-doctoral support. Reinhard Wolf stood ready to examine the dissertation at short notice and provided many valuable comments.

At various stages of the project, a number of individuals have contributed to this book in very concrete ways. I am greatly indebted to Wolfgang Wagner, who not only read and commented on large parts of this book throughout the years. Without his encouragement and support I would certainly not be where I am now. My colleagues in Mainz, Frank Gadinger, Johannes Marx and Taylan Yildiz, were always willing to discuss any idea that popped up in my mind, also read and commented on larger parts of the book and were on standby in critical periods during the final time of writing it down. I also profited much from the feedback and help of Jörg Faust, Wolfgang Munro, Markus Würz and Eric Hower.

My thanks also go to those people in Brussels, London and Berlin who agreed to be interviewed during the course of the research for this book and to the University of Mainz for enabling me to carry out these interviews through a generous grant. I am grateful to Knud Erik Jørgensen and Audie Klotz for including my book in this series and to them and an anonymous reviewer for valuable comments which helped me to improve the argument. Alexandra Webster and Liz Blackmore made it a pleasure for me to work with Palgrave.

My parents' trust in whatever it was that I was doing there never failed during the past years and this was extremely reassuring for me throughout. And at long last, much more than thanks are due to the one who does not want to be named here. But she knows who she is and so do I.
