

Early Modern Literature in History

General Editors: Cedric C. Brown, Professor of English and Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Humanities, University of Reading; Andrew Hadfield, Professor of English, University of Sussex, Brighton

Advisory Board: Donna Hamilton, University of Maryland; Jean Howard, University of Columbia; John Kerrigan, University of Cambridge; Richard McCoy, CUNY; Sharon Achinstein, University of Oxford

Within the period 1520–1740 this series discusses many kinds of writing, both within and outside the established canon. The volumes may employ different theoretical perspectives, but they share a historical awareness and an interest in seeing their texts in lively negotiation with their own and successive cultures.

Acknowledgments

For a book that revolves around the importance of local places, it seems only natural to proceed with my acknowledgments via the locations that had a role in its making. The early work for this book occurred during my graduate school years in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. There I was privileged to work with a dissertation committee – Jessica Wolfe, Reid Barbour, Mary Floyd-Wilson, Ritchie Kendall, and Barbara Harris – that both engaged my ideas and asked the difficult questions needed to refine them. I am particularly grateful to Jessica Wolfe and Reid Barbour for their continued feedback and advice. I would also like to thank Chris Hill and Alice Espinosa for reading and commenting on early versions of my work. The Department of English provided an atmosphere of scholarly collaboration and funding for conference travel, while the Graduate School supported me with an Off-Campus Dissertation Award that allowed for a semester of archival work in England. Finally, the helpful staff at the Walter Royal Davis Library – especially Glenn Hayslett and Joe Mitchem – offered resource assistance at every turn.

For the past five years, I have called the University of Virginia's College at Wise home. Here, my work has benefited from a generous administration, thoughtful colleagues, and enthusiastic students. Gil Blackburn, Amelia Harris, and the Faculty Development Committee have provided conference and research travel grants, a summer stipend, and a semester's leave in the fall of 2009 that was crucial in completing the book manuscript. My department chair, Ken Tiller, has offered encouragement, advice, and practical assistance in carving out time for research amidst a busy teaching schedule. Tom Goyens, Chris Scalia, Mark Clark, and Don Leech have all read sections of the manuscript and provided insightful comments. Finally, the congenial staff at the John Cook Wyllie Library – especially Robin Benke, Bill Statzer, Kris Pottenger, and Kim Marshall – have tracked down resources (often from beyond Wise) and provided a quiet but friendly space in which to complete this book.

Local Negotiations has also been shaped by its contact with places further afield. A Folger Institute seminar, 'Genealogies of Britishness,' helped broaden my perspective on the complexities of early modern nationhood. The patient and helpful staffs at the Folger Shakespeare Library, Norfolk Record Office, Bodleian Library, British Library, and Bristol Record Office have all supported the research phase of this book. I would also like to thank my editors at Palgrave Macmillan: Paula Kennedy for her initial interest in the manuscript, Catherine Mitchell for her tireless fielding of my many queries, Andrew Hadfield and Cedric Brown for their insightful suggestions for revision, and Jo North for her careful reading of the manuscript at the copy-editing stage. An earlier version of Chapter 2 appeared in English Literary Renaissance 36:3 (Autumn 2006), and of Chapter 4 in The Seventeenth Century 24:1 (Spring 2009), and I am grateful to English Literary Renaissance and Manchester University Press, respectively, for permission to reproduce this material.

Finally, my wife Wendy has filled all of these places with her enthusiasm, encouragement, and love. She has accompanied me on research trips, listened to half-baked ideas, jotted down notes, and shared in the inevitable highs and lows that come with a project of this scope. She is the genius loci of this text.
