

Culture, Mind, and Society

The Book Series of the Society for Psychological Anthropology

The Society for Psychological Anthropology—a section of the American Anthropology Association—and Palgrave Macmillan dedicated to publishing innovative research in culture and psychology that illuminates the workings of the human mind within the social, cultural, and political contexts that shape thought, emotion, and experience. As anthropologists seek to bridge gaps between ideation and emotion or agency and structure and as psychologists, psychiatrists, and medical anthropologists search for ways to engage with cultural meaning and difference, this interdisciplinary terrain is more active than ever.

Acknowledgments

I thank Stanley P. Smith for reading this manuscript many times and for his many useful editorial suggestions. I thank my former research assistant, Kristina Cantin, for helping me reflect on the implications of my model of dreaming for well-being, for bringing numerous additional sources to my attention, for her careful computations in Chapter 5, and for her editorial suggestions. I thank Ingrid E. Josephs for her inspiring commentary on my 2002 Cultural and Psychology article on intertextuality and the dream. I thank Janet Keller for securing me excellent comments on an early article-version of Chapter 5 and my 2006 Publishing and Professional Communication class for their comments on an early version of this chapter. I thank Thomas Csordas for suggesting that I saw dreams as a transitional realm in his comments on my paper, "Dream Stages," delivered at the tenth biennial meetings of the Society for Psychological Anthropology (2007) at Manhattan Beach, California. I also thank Alex Hinton who sheperded this book through the review process. Lastly, I thank the many undergraduate students who contributed dreams and analyses to my study.
