Many people contributed in valuable ways to the creation of this volume, and I would like to express my deep sense of gratitude to them all. My friend Dr Barbara White gave me the initial idea for this book with the generosity characteristic of her, Professor Barrie Bullen encouraged me to develop the volume further, and Professor Cedric Brown helped me to find a publisher for it. Charmian Hearne at Macmillan has been an exemplary editor: she understood what I was trying to do immediately. Dr Jonathan Bignell has not only been a mentor to me since my arrival at the University of Reading, but he also gave me important advice on some parts of the book. The contributors to this volume have been a delight to work with: they entirely disproved warnings I had received before-hand about the difficulties of editing. It is an honour for me to be allowed to present their work, and I can only hope I have done them justice. My father, Dr Max Lesnik-Oberstein was, as ever, an invaluable advisor, commentator, and my 'walking library'. My friends Daniela and Manu have not only made Reading a home for me in the true sense of the word, but have also patiently read all my work and reassured and encouraged me. My sister Maaïke also commented on my own chapter with her usual extraordinary intelligence and wisdom: the remaining faults in it are entirely my own. Finally, this book was principally inspired by my mother's passionate and deep interest in childhood and education, as has been the case for all my work on childhood.

It is in relation to my mother that thanks of a somewhat different order are due, for this book was conceived just before, and completed in the aftermath of, her much too early death, at the age of just 54, in a terrible accident. This seems to me an appropriate place to attempt to convey – in what can only be an inadequate way – my thanks to the people who offered support during this time of personal tragedy for me and my family: the whole English Department at the University of Reading showed extraordinary kindness to me as a newly arrived lecturer whom most of the staff hardly knew. Special thanks here are due to Professor

Cedric Brown for an immediate understanding of the unusual circumstances I found myself in, and his great support during that time; to Mr Tony Watkins, the head of Children's Literature teaching at Reading, for being the kindest and most generous of colleagues; and to our wonderful departmental secretary Mrs Carole Robb, for her understanding and warmth. My love to all my dear friends who, more than ever, were there for me. Tribute to the courage of my grandmother (Bobe) and my father in going on at all. And, finally, feelings too deep for words for the six people who made my own going on not just possible, but meaningful: Patrick Casement, my partner Hoyte, my friend Esther, and my sisters Sarit, Saskia and Maaike.

Notes on the Contributors

Jenny Bourne Taylor is a Senior Lecturer in English at the University of Sussex. Her publications include In the Secret Theatre of Home: Wilkie Collins's Sensation Narrative and Nineteenth-Century Psychology (1988); ed., with Sally Shuttleworth, Embodied Selves: an Anthology of Psychological Texts 1830–1890 (1997), and 'Obscure Recesses: Locating the Victorian Unconscious' in B.J. Bullen (ed.), Writing and Victorianism (1997). She has recently completed an edition of Mary Elizabeth Braddon's Lady Audley's Secret (forthcoming, 1998) and is currently working on Illegitimate Fictions: Bastardy, the Novel and English Culture, 1750–1900.

Erica Burman is Senior Lecturer in Developmental Psychology and Women's Studies at the Manchester Metropolitan University. Her work spans debates about subjectivity, gender and childhood not only as they enter into psychology, but in policy and cultural arenas. Her previous publications include Deconstructing Developmental Psychology (1994), Challenging Women: Psychology's Exclusions, Feminist Possibilities (co-authored, 1995), Psychology Discourse Practice: From Regulation to Resistance (co-authored, 1996) and Deconstructing Feminist Psychology (edited, in press).

Joe Kelleher is a Lecturer in Drama and Theatre Studies at Roehampton Institute in London. His research interests are the relations between literature and performance. His publications include Tony Harrison (1996). Plays by Joe Kelleher performed recently are: Mrs Freud & Mrs Jung (1997), The Wolfman (1995–6), and The Clouded Eye (1994). He is a member of the London-based theatre company 'Theatre PUR'.

Karín Lesnik-Oberstein is a Lecturer in English, American, and Children's Literature at the University of Reading, as well as being an Associate Director of the university's Centre for International Research in Childhood: Literature, Culture, Media (CIRCL). Her research interests are in the areas of critical and literary theory, psychoanalysis, childhood, and children's literature, but she is primarily interested in working in the social sciences and humanities from an inter- and multi-disciplinary perspective. Her publications include: Children's Literature: Criticism and the Fictional Child (1994); 'Defining Children's Literature and Childhood' in Peter Hunt (ed.), The International Companion Encyclopedia of Children's Literature (1997); 'Children's Literature and the Environment' in Neil Sammells and Richard Kerridge (eds), Writing the Environment (1998); and 'Fantasy, Childhood, and Literature: In Pursuit of Wonderlands', in Barbara White and Ceri Sullivan (eds), Writing and Fantasy (forthcoming 1998).

Margarida Morgado is a teacher of English as a Foreign Language, English Culture and English Literature at the Escola Superior de Educação de Castelo Branco, Portugal, since 1984, where she is now Professora-coordenadora (Senior Lecturer) and head of the English Studies Unit. Her interest in child studies developed from children's literature and from research done on Charles Dickens and widened through international contacts in the field of education. She wrote an MA thesis on Dickens and children's fiction, a dissertation on the representation of the child through play in twentieth-century (adult) novels and she is currently working on other modes of child representation/construction in twentieth-century narratives both for adults and children.

Kimberley Reynolds is Reader in Children's Literature at Roehampton Institute, London, where she is also Director of the National Centre for Research in Children's Literature. She researches in the field of children's literature, the history of childhood, women's studies and nineteenth-century literature and art. Recent publications include Girls Only? Gender and Popular Juvenile Fiction in Britain 1880–1910 (1990); Children's Literature in the 1890s and 1990s (1994) and 'Reading Back: Youth Culture and Juvenile Fiction' (1996; reprinted in International Review of Children's Literature and Librarianship).

Rex Stainton Rogers is a Lecturer in Psychology at the University of Reading. His research interests are in social issues and transdisciplinarity. His publications include (with Wendy Stainton Rogers): Stories of Childhood: Shifting Agendas of Child Concern (1992), and (Rex Stainton Rogers et al.) Social Psychology: A Critical Agenda (1995).

Wendy Stainton Rogers is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Health and Social Welfare at the Open University. Her research interests are in the areas of child welfare and child care. Her publications include (with Rex Stainton Rogers): Stories of Childhood: Shifting Agendas of Child Concern (1992), and (with J. Roche): Children's Welfare and Children's Rights (1994), as well as papers on child protection and on issues concerning children and sexuality.

Stephen Thomson was a Lecturer in English Literature at the University of Glasgow. He wrote his PhD thesis on children's literature, and is currently working on informal sociological narratives, as well as writing a paper on Flaubert's Education sentimentale.

Sara Thornton is 'Maître de Conférences' (Senior Lecturer) at the University of Picardy–Jules Verne in France. She has published articles in both France and Britain on Thackeray, Dickens, Wilkie Collins, Bram Stoker, the Gothic tale, and more particularly on the problematic status of writing, on food and digestion, on pollution, contamination and cleansing, and on monetary systems and symbolic exchange in Victorian literature. She is currently working on a book which will examine the metaphoric systems in the early and mid-Victorian novel, and how these systems are shaped by what Hayden White might call the modes, emplotments and limiting discourses of an era.

Valerie Walkerdine is Professor of Critical Psychology and Head of the Division of Critical Psychology in the New School for Cultural Research, University of Western Sydney, Sydney, Australia. She was previously Professor of the Psychology of Communication, Goldsmiths' College, University of London. She has written a number of books about children and childhood, the latest of which is Daddy's Girl: Young Girls and Popular Culture (1997). She is presently working on a number of projects, including a book-length version of Children in Cyberspace and a study of transition to womanhood in 1990s Britain.

Paul Yates is a Lecturer in the Graduate Research Centre for Education in the University of Sussex. As an anthropologist, his research interests centre on the development of cultural analyses within the broad fields of Education and Professional Development. His recent work has focused on gender in professional formation and on the moral agency of the school. Recent lectures/papers include 'Medievalism, Modernity and Identity: Professional Formation in the Church of England' (1996) and 'Legitimizing the Moral Curriculum' (1997).
