Acknowledgments

Central Asian studies in Norway represent a most limited area. It was therefore far from self-evident that my application for scholarship in this field would be granted. I am all the more grateful that the Faculty of Arts at the University of Bergen gave me the chance to pursue the study of Central Asia to doctoral level.

First and foremost, however, this book is the result of the late Professor Alf Grannes' eagerness to promote the study of Central Asia and the Caucasus at the University of Bergen. Being a Slavicist himself, Grannes began a fruitful and productive joint tutorship together with Professor Odd-Bjørn Fure of the Department of History. Their combined expertise and enthusiasm produced a stimulating environment, from which a number of students could profit throughout the 1990s. The result was a number of interesting studies of Central Asia and the Caucasus. Without Professor Grannes' initiative, this book could not have been written. It was therefore a great loss when Grannes was gradually incapacitated from incurable illness and died in April 2000. Without Professor Fure's keen interest in this project and his insistent encouragements in difficult moments, this work might never have been completed. Finally, I am very grateful for the generosity and hospitality of Dr. John Shoerberlein, who introduced me to Central Asian studies at the Harvard University and who was willing to share with me his unique scholarly expertise in this field.

Any shortcomings of the work remain, however, the responsibility of the author alone.
