Acknowledgements

Thanks are due to many people for help in the writing of this book. The 'Gender and Language Research Group' at Lancaster University have read and discussed several draft chapters, and questions such as 'what exactly do we mean by construction?' and 'can we talk about damaging discourses?' have been regular topics for the group in recent years. In particular, I would like to thank Juliane Schwarz and Stephanie Suhr for constantly 'being there' and being continually enthusiastic about gender and discourse. For use of their data, I would like to thank Catherine Kitetu, Sarah Ogbay and Kay Wheeler. For providing me with time and space to write, as well as ideas, I would like to thank all the staff of the English Language Institute, University of Michigan, particularly Diane Larsen-Freeman, Joan Morley, John Swales and Amy Yamashiro. The Academic and Humanities Research Board also enabled me to take a one-term 'Leave award'. For constructive comments on the book I would also like to thank readers Judith Baxter, Sara Mills and Joan Swann. Thanks are also due to Jill Lake of Palgrave Macmillan, for so calmly helping me through the writing and publishing process. And, lastly, I need to acknowledge the whole 'gender and discourse' academic discourse community, and all the interesting work produced which I simply have no space to refer to in this book.
