Acknowledgements

This book would not have been written without the help of numerous archivists and librarians in Cambridge, London, Washington, Paris, Caen, Cherbourg, Marseille, Perpignan and Reims. The Harold Hyam Wingate Foundation kindly gave me a scholarship to support travel costs associated with the project, and I am grateful to them. I acknowledge, with thanks, permission from the Imperial War Museum, London, to quote from their archives.

A great deal of what I have learnt about being a historian has come from working on earlier projects with Don Simmonds. I owe a particular debt of gratitude to Douglas Johnson, Roderick Kedward, Siân Reynolds and Bill Kidd, all of whom have shown consistent interest in this project over several years.

Lena and Martin Powell have kept me going, and encouraged me warmly throughout. This book has been an obsession for over three years. Richard Footitt shared the travelling and the obsession, and I am profoundly grateful to him.
