

French Politics, Society and Culture Series

General Editor: Robert Elgie, Paddy Moriarty Professor of Government and International Studies, Dublin City University

France has always fascinated outside observers. Now, the country is undergoing a period of profound transformation. France is faced with a rapidly changing international and European environment and it is having to rethink some of its most basic social, political and economic orthodoxies. As elsewhere, there is pressure to conform. And yet, while France is responding in ways that are no doubt familiar to people in other European countries, it is also managing to maintain elements of its long-standing distinctiveness. Overall, it remains a place that is not exactly comme les autres.

This new series examines all aspects of French politics, society and culture. In so doing it focuses on the changing nature of the French system as well as the established patterns of political, social and cultural life. Contributors to the series are encouraged to present new and innovative arguments so that the informed reader can learn and understand more about one of the most beguiling and compelling of all European countries.

About the Author

Gino Raymond is Reader in French at the University of Bristol, England. He received his BA from the University of Bristol and his PhD from Cambridge University. He is trained in both French studies and political science. His interest in the evolution of French society and culture was honed by periods of teaching in a number of French institutions, including the Ecole normale supérieure in Paris. Since returning to teach in England, he has continued to develop his research interests in the emanations of France's political culture, both through political discourse and through strategies of literary commitment. This has so far resulted in five books: France during the Socialist Years (ed., 1994), André Malraux: Politics and the Temptation of Myth (1995), A Historical Dictionary of France (1998), Structures of Power in Modern France (ed., 1999) and Redefining the French Republic (ed. with A. Cole, 2005). His journal publications include articles in Patterns of Prejudice, French Cultural Studies and the Revue André Malraux. His work has also been translated into several languages. He is married, with two children.

Acknowledgements

This book developed over a period of years, drawing on a sustained period of interest in the Parti communiste français that gave rise to a number of journal articles and chapters in edited books on the subject of the Communists in France, both as a party and as a community. Chapters 5 and 6 are versions of contributions to other works, and I am grateful to the editors, John Gaffney and Helen Drake, for their permission to adapt them for the purposes of this book. I am indebted also to the PCF staff at place Colonel Fabien, who, while their building looked like a bunker, displayed anything but a bunker mentality. The completion of this project would not have been possible without the generous research leave afforded by the Department of French of the University of Bristol during 2003–2004, and the material support provided through the Arts Faculty Research Fund of the University of Bristol that sustained me during the indispensable periods of research in France. Last but not least, I wish to express my thanks to the staff of the French Department office, especially Christina Hollow, for their exceptional dedication in helping me to negotiate the technical hurdles involved in preparing the manuscript. Any flaws in the form or the content of the book are, of course, entirely attributable to me.
