

Palgrave Studies in the Enlightenment, Romanticism and Cultures of Print

General Editors: Professor Anne K. Mellor and Professor Clifford Siskin

Palgrave Studies in the Enlightenment, Romanticism and the Cultures of Print will feature work that does not fit comfortably within established boundaries – whether between periods or between disciplines. Uniquely, it will combine efforts to engage the power and materiality of print with explorations of gender, race, and class. By attending as well to intersections of literature with the visual arts, medicine, law, and science, the series will enable a large-scale rethinking of the origins of modernity.

Acknowledgments

Many individuals and organizations have encouraged and supported me in this project, and to them all I owe my deepest appreciation. A few, however, deserve special mention. I would like to thank Kari Lokke, Catherine Robson, and David Simpson for their enthusiastic and challenging readings of early drafts. In particular, Kari Lokke has been a source of encouragement and inspiration since long before the germ of this study took form. Discussions with Alessa Johns during the project's early stages helped me to sort out the shape the project would take. Jan Wellington and Gina Luria Walker read portions of the manuscript as it developed and offered timely and insightful suggestions. Library staff at Shields Library at UC Davis and Bancroft Library at UC Berkeley also receive my thanks, but Nancy Kushigian at Shields deserves special recognition for her valuable research assistance. UC Davis has provided a variety of grants and fellowships, large and small, that have made the research for this project possible. Portions of Chapters 3 and 4 have appeared in Nineteenth-Century Prose and Eighteenth-Century Studies, and I thank the editors of those journals for permission to include that material here. And finally, my deepest gratitude goes to Noel Phipps, without whose generosity, faith, and encouragement this project would never have arrived at completion.
