Palgrave Studies in the Enlightenment, Romanticism and Cultures of Print will feature work that does not fit comfortably within established boundaries—whether between periods or between disciplines. Uniquely, it will combine efforts to engage the power and materiality of print with explorations of gender, race, and class. By attending as well to intersections of literature with the visual arts, medicine, law, and science, the series will enable a large-scale rethinking of the origins of modernity.

Acknowledgments

It is in turning to the acknowledgments for this book that I realize most fully the strength of the claim for the inevitably social nature of authorship.

I am indebted to the research assistance provided by several institutions. In particular, I would like to thank the Charles E. Young Research Library, Department of Special Collections, UCLA, and especially Jeff Rankin and Octavio Olvera, whose patience and kindness allowed me to explore their superb Children's Book Collection. I am also grateful to the research staff of Dove Cottage, the Wordsworth Trust, and extend sincere thanks to Jeff Cowton and Rebecca Turner for making my time at the library so very productive and pleasant. I am greatly appreciative of the permissions granted by Dove Cottage, the Wordsworth Trust and the Harry Ransom Research Center, University of Texas at Austin to quote from several manuscripts held by them. This book is enhanced by the inclusion of many illustrations, and I am thankful to the following institutions for granting permission to reproduce these images: Dove Cottage, the Wordsworth Trust, Cumbria, England; Harry Ransom Research Center, University of Texas at Austin; Lessing J. Rosenwald Collection, Library of Congress; National Portrait Gallery, London, England; Osborne Collection of Early Children's Books, Toronto Public Library, Canada; and Department of Special Collections, Charles E. Young Research Library, UCLA.

The enthusiasm Anne Mellor has displayed for this project from the outset has been incredibly important to its fulfillment, and I am deeply indebted to her for providing me with such a fine model of scholarly and pedagogical achievement. As series editors, Anne Mellor and Clifford Siskin have provided invaluable feedback and support. Betty Schellenberg has also been a generous and incisive reader for this project, particularly in all questions touching upon the earlier eighteenth century. And I am grateful to Andrea Keesey for her superb contribution as an editorial assistant in preparing the index for this book.

A version of Chapter 1 appeared in Eighteenth-Century Fiction 19:1–2 (Fall–Winter 2006–7): 123–50, which has been reprinted with the kind permission of the editors. Material support has been provided by a doctoral fellowship from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada; a Beverly Berg Dissertation Fellowship from the Department of English, UCLA; and a President's Research Grant, an Endowed Research Fellowship and a University Publications Fund Grant, all from Simon Fraser University. This project required considerable archival research, which has been generously supported by a Thayer Graduate Fellowship and a Mitzi Meyers Memorial Fellowship from the Department of Special Collections, Charles E. Young Research Library, UCLA; a Lenart Travel Award from the School of Graduate Studies, UCLA; and a Huntington Library Fellowship from the Huntington Library, San Marino.

The support of my family made this book possible. The faith in me expressed by my parents has been constant, perhaps best evidenced by their willingness to support what must have seemed a bizarre decision when, in 1998, I abandoned a flourishing legal career to pursue graduate studies in English. I have dedicated this book to my beloved grandmother, whom I vividly recall escaping into her study to complete work on her own book; her memory is a continual source of encouragement and inspiration. As for my son Ethan, this project has quite literally shadowed his entire existence; he was born just a few short weeks after it was filed in its original form as a dissertation, and has had to endure, on more occasions that I care to recount, being told that "Mama was working on her book." But above all, there is my husband Michael, whose commitment to this project has been unwavering, and whose generosity as a reader has been staggering. He is truly the best embodiment of a family author that I could have hoped for, and his influence is to be felt on every page that follows. Indeed, it would not be going too far to reverse Mary Shelley's remarks about Percy's involvement in the composition of Frankenstein, to say: "I certainly owe the suggestion of more than one incident, and more than one train of feeling, to my husband."

The author and publishers have made every attempt to contact copyright holders. If any have inadvertently been overlooked, the publisher will be pleased to make the necessary arrangement at the first opportunity.
