

Early Modern Literature in History

General Editors: Cedric C. Brown, Professor of English and Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Humanities, University of Reading; Andrew Hadfield, Professor of English, University of Sussex.

Advisory Board: Donna Hamilton, University of Maryland; Jean Howard, Columbia University; John Kerrigan, University of Cambridge; Richard McCoy, CUNY; Sharon Achinstein, University of Oxford.

Within the period 1520–1740 this series discusses many kinds of writing, both within and outside the established canon. The volumes may employ different theoretical perspectives, but they share an historical awareness and an interest in seeing their texts in lively negotiation with their own and successive cultures.

Acknowledgements

While researching, writing and preparing this book for publication I have been aided and influenced by many erudite and generous scholars, and my thanks are due to all those mentioned below, as well as others whom space precludes; any errors in this work are wholly my own and do not reflect their careful advice. To begin, I would like to acknowledge the influence and support of those others working in the field of Early Modern women writers and feminism, in particular Catherine Belsey, Danielle Clarke, Stephen Clucas, Marguerite Corporall, Rebecca D'Monte, Richard Dutton, Alison Easton, Alison Findlay, Akiko Kusunoki, Nicole Pohl, Heather Wolfe, Stephanie Hodgson-Wright, Helen Wilcox, Gweno Williams and Georgianna Ziegler. My thanks are also due to S.P. Cerasano not only for sustained scholarly support over more years than either of us care to mention, but also for friendship. I am also grateful to the continued support offered by the staff of the English and Women, Culture and Society programmes at the University of Dundee, in particular Jane Goldman, Rachel Jones, Gail Low, Jim Stewart, Aliko Varvogli, Pat Whatley, Mary Young and all those students past and present who have made me rethink my own old-fashioned ideas about women writers. My thanks are also due, more widely, to the University of Dundee and to its library, as well as to the Folger Shakespeare Library; the Bodleian Library; the British Library; the university libraries of Nottingham and St Andrews; the Archives of the Départementales du Nord at Lille; the Mediatheque, Cambrai; and the Bibliotheque Mazzarine, Paris. I am grateful for financial assistance from the University of Dundee, the British Academy and the Folger Shakespeare Library. At Palgrave Macmillan I thank my editors: Paula Kennedy for her faith in the project and Christabel Scaife for her helpfulness. Finally, and perhaps inevitably, I wish to thank my family – Geoff, Rich and Robs Ward. I am reluctant to suggest that this book either participates in, or initiates, a familial discourse. Instead, I'd like to say thank you to my family for all the splendid dinners, with their tales of the day, the shared jokes, the heady wines and – most especially – for the fish.
