ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Sections of Chapter 3 were previously published as “Thomistic Metaphysics and Ethics in the Poetry and Prose of Thomas Traherne,” Literature and Theology 2002 16 (3): 248–69. I thank Oxford University Press for permission to reprint such material here. I also thank the Provost and Board of Trustees at Lafayette College for providing a sabbatical from teaching during the academic year 2006–2007, which allowed me to make final changes on the manuscript. For their helpful suggestions on earlier drafts of sections of this work, I would like to thank Julia Reinhard Lupton, Catherine Martin, and Marshall Grossman. For continuing support of my research, I also thank the chair of Lafayette’s English Department, Suzanne Westfall, as well as English Department colleagues, including Lee Upton, Lynn Van Dyke, and James Woolley. Thanks especially to Farideh Koochi-Kamali for supporting this project from its inception and to the entire Palgrave team, particularly Julia Cohen, Elizabeth Sabo, and Rosemi Mederos at Scribe, for their expert assistance in shepherding the book to publication. I extend a very warm thank you to David Schragg, my friend, neighbor, and frequent interlocutor on cultural studies and contemporary theory. This book is dedicated to Anna Siomopoulos, without whose support and partnership it would not have been possible.
