Confronting Evil in International Relations
Previous Publications

Contents

Acknowledgments vii
Notes on Contributors ix

Part 1 The Problem of Evil in International Relations

Introduction: Evil, Responsibility, and Response 3
Renée Jeffery

1 Evil and the Problem of Responsibility 11
Renée Jeffery

Part 2 Agency and Responsibility for Evil in International Relations

2 Individual Agency and Responsibility for Atrocity 37
Kirsten Ainley

3 Collective Evildoing 61
Arne Johan Vetlesen

Part 3 Ethical Responses to Evil in International Relations

4 Evil, Agency, and Punishment 89
Anthony F. Lang, Jr.

5 Reconciliation: An Ethic for Responding to Evil in Global Politics 115
Daniel Philpott

6 Avenging Evil: A Reconsideration 151
Ian Hall

7 To Forgive the Unforgivable? Evil and the Ethics of Forgiveness in International Relations 179
Renée Jeffery
Questions of “evil,” its meaning and manifestations in international politics, and the ethical challenges posed by its occurrence, have directed much of my research in recent years. While many, perhaps even most, people have questioned my sanity in taking on such a difficult, contentious, and in many ways unsavory subject, a number of valued colleagues from near and far have, nonetheless, sought to engage, on an intellectual and critical level, my ideas about evil as they have developed. In particular, I have benefited from conversations about this and other related subjects, as well as the support and collegiality of Kirsten Ainley, Judith Brett, Chris Brown, Ian Hall, and Tony Lang. During the initial stages of planning this collection of essays I was employed as a lecturer at La Trobe University in Melbourne. I am extremely grateful for the support and encouragement I received from a number of my colleagues there, including Gwenda Tavan, Tom Weber, Judith Brett, and Dennis Altmann. The latter stages of writing, editing, and compiling this book took place at the University of Adelaide, where I took up a lectureship in the School of History and Politics in 2007. I would also like to acknowledge the contribution of Toby Wahl at Palgrave Macmillan for his assistance in getting this project off the ground in the first place.

However, the people that deserve the greatest thanks for seeing this work to fruition are, of course, the contributors. This work brings together the insights and expertise of a diverse range of scholars: from the fields of International Relations and philosophy, and hailing from the United Kingdom, Australia, the United States, and Norway, their areas of interest include international ethics, international law, moral philosophy, psychology, international relations theory, conflict resolution, the history of international political thought, and religion in international affairs. Each has made an invaluable contribution to the book, bringing their own specialisations and perspectives to what is a subject fraught with contention and controversy. I would like to thank each of them for their dedication to this project over the past two years and for their cooperation and professionalism in the final stages of putting the work together. On a personal note, I would also like to thank Ian for his unfailing support, encouragement, and intellectual engagement, both at home and at work.
Notes on the Contributors

Ian Hall is a Senior Lecturer in International Politics in the School of History and Politics, University of Adelaide. He is the author of The International Thought of Martin Wight (New York: Palgrave, 2006) and several articles on international theory and the history of international political thought. He is currently working on a collaborative project on international ethics and a book on utopianism and international theory.

Renée Jeffery is a Lecturer in International Politics at the University of Adelaide. She is the author of Evil and International Relations: Human Suffering in an Age of Terror (New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2008); Hugo Grotius in International Thought (New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2006); along with a number of articles published in International Affairs, Millennium: Journal of International Studies, The European Journal of International Relations, The SAIS Review of International Affairs, and Conversations in Religion and Theology. Her current research includes work on the international dimensions of forgiveness, and a co-authored study of the intellectual history of international ethics.
Anthony F. Lang, Jr. is a Senior Lecturer in the School of International Relations at the University of St. Andrews. His work explores questions of international political theory, with particular attention to questions of violence and ethics at the global level. He has published or edited books, articles, and chapters on inter alia, humanitarian intervention, economic sanctions, coercive diplomacy, responsibility, agency, Hannah Arendt, and Hans Morgenthau. His current work focuses on punishment in the international system and the role(s) of rules and constitutionalism at the global level.

Daniel Philpott is an Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science and the Joan B. Kroc Institute for International Peace Studies at the University of Notre Dame. He is author of Revolutions in Sovereignty: How Ideas Shaped Modern International Relations (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2001) and editor of The Politics of Past Evil: Religion, Reconciliation, and Transitional Justice (Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 2006). He has also published articles on religion and international affairs, the ethics of self-determination, reconciliation, and religious freedom as an issue of human rights. He pursues an activist dimension of his interests by working for faith-based reconciliation in Kashmir as a Senior Associate of the International Center for Religion and Diplomacy.

Arne Johan Vetlesen is Professor of Philosophy at the University of Oslo, Norway. He has published fourteen books, among them Perception, Empathy, and Judgment (University Park, PA: Penn State University Press, 1994), Closeness. An Ethics, with H. Jodalen (Oslo: Scandinavian University Press, 1997), and Evil and Human Agency: Understanding Collective Evildoing (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005). Besides evil, his research interests include current shifts in the cultural understanding of freedom, autonomy, and pain.