ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In essence, this project began on January 3, 2000—the day I moved to England to begin my Ph.D. at the University of York. Much has happened since that day, both personally and professionally. The roots of Constructing Chaucer are found in my doctoral dissertation, but the material has since gone through countless reconsiderations, rewritings, and revisions. It is now a far different piece of scholarship, and the number of people who have helped me along in this process are too numerous to thank here. Therefore, I have chosen to single out just a handful of individuals below, without whose help the book may never have come to fruition.

On a personal note, to my friends and family, I can't thank you enough for your humor, your curiosity, and your support. Professionally, I am indebted the librarians at the University of York Library, Leeds University Library, the Bodleian, the British Library, and Hayden Library for their assistance with rare books in particular. I received invaluable feedback from audience members at several conferences over several years, and I appreciate having the opportunity to present various forms of this research. Indelible marks were left on my life and my work during my time at both York and Arizona State University (where I was an M.A. student and, later, an Instructor), and to those who gave me assistance, encouragement, teaching opportunities, or simply collegial good will, I am much obliged. I also must acknowledge the aid given to me by the anonymous reader of this book, whose detailed report left me with significant amounts of work to do before the text could be called "complete," but it was clearly time well spent since the monograph benefitted greatly from his/her thoughtful critique.

Specific thanks must be given to Robert E. Bjork, my M.A. supervisor at ASU who has now been a consistent source of support for over a decade. Also from ASU, Neal Lester and Greg Glau advised me in key professional areas, and Dhira Mahoney and Robert Sturges kindly provided much insightful feedback on my manuscript. At York, I especially owe my gratitude to Nicola McDonald, who helped to guide me through my doctoral work and oversaw my viva. Derek Brewer, too, deserves recognition for serving as the magisterial external examiner of my dissertation. Sadly, Prof. Brewer passed away just months before this book was to be published—may he rest in peace. Most significant of all has been the assistance of Alastair J. Minnis, my doctoral supervisor. Alastair is my greatest influence as a theorist, and my most steadfast supporter as a young scholar; in simple terms, without his help this book would never have seen the light of day. Finally, I would like to thank the editors at Palgrave Macmillan for their hard work and assistance, and particularly Bonnie Wheeler, a wonderful steward of the “New Middle Ages Series” who has never wavered in her enthusiastic support for this project.

To one and all, I borrow from Shakespeare’s Sebastian in saying “I can no other answer make but thanks, / And thanks” (Twelfth Night 3.3.14–15).
