Acknowledgements

First and foremost, thanks must go to my Ph.D. supervisor, Kathleen Burk, who gave kindly of her limited time whenever I was in need of it. Without her wise counsel – and incisive editing – this book would never have been finished.

I must also single out the financial and intellectual support of Professor Niall Ferguson of Harvard University, who has read – and re-read – most of the text that follows without (much) complaint. My examiners, George Peden and John Ramsden, also made a number of very helpful suggestions.

During my time at The Independent, the editorial staff at that newspaper had to endure a series of inaccuracies and mistakes while I thought about planning. I should therefore praise the patience of Ian Birrell, Sally Chatterton, Sean O’Grady, Adrian Hamilton and Matt Hoffman.

A host of academic teachers, collaborators and friends have also played a vital role in bringing this project to completion. In alphabetical order, what follows owes a great deal to Lawrence Black, Andrew Blick, Martin Ceadal, the late Charles Feinstein, Ruth Harris, Felicity Heal, Rodney Lowe, Roger Middleton, Avner Offer, Helen Parr, David Parrott, Hugh Pemberton, Kate Quinn, Richard Sheldon, John Stevenson, John Stewart, James Thompson, Jim Tomlinson, Christopher Tyerman, James Vaughan, Andrew Vereker and John Welshman.

Everyone who I lived with during the long gestation of this book must also be thanked for putting up with economic and social planning: Nick Atkins, Martin Booth, Caroline Crowther, Dan Girnary, Rebecca Girnary, Emma Gordon, Claire Young, Nicholas Sweeney, Eui-Sik Suh, Emma Taylor and Cathy Wilson. The final drafts have been enlivened by the (sometimes contrary) views of Lyndsay Grant.

A host of archivists and librarians have also helped, especially those at the National Archives in Kew, where most of the research was done. The staff of archives at Churchill College, Cambridge, and the Modern Records Centre at Warwick University have also done sterling work. I am especially indebted to the custodians of party political archives: Jill Spellman, at the Conservative Party Archive in the Bodleian (along with Colin Harris and the staff of Room 132), and Stephen Bird and Jill Martin at the Labour Party’s Archive in Manchester.

The Arts and Humanities Research Council and UCL funded the P.h.D. on which this book is based; the University of Bristol, New College, Oxford, Oxford Brookes University and the Wellcome Trust for the History of Medicine provided funds for travel and accommodation. Its final publication has been assisted by a grant from the Scouloudi Foundation in association with the Institute of Historical Research.

All mistakes and inaccuracies are, of course, my own responsibility. Finally, this work is dedicated to my mother.
