Acknowledgements

This book is not simply the result of an individual effort. As with most research projects, a number of acknowledgements are more than necessary.

First and foremost, I am indebted to the numerous practitioners who agreed to share with me the insights and intricacies of EU–US competition relations. These individuals met with me when they could have otherwise spent their valuable time working on the practical matters of transatlantic competition relations as private-practice lawyers, government and business representatives, and principals and agents. Because many aspects of competition policy must conform to precise legal statutes that protect information, I preserve, at their request, the anonymity of these individuals.

Second, this book would not have been possible without generous financial assistance from the EU Center at the University of Pittsburgh, an EU Fulbright Grant in Brussels, and an Umberger Scholarship and Mellon Fellowship in Pittsburgh. In addition, portions of this research benefited immeasurably from the comments of participants at a number of conferences and workshops as well as colleagues at the European University Institute’s Robert Schuman Centre for Advanced Studies and the University of Edinburgh.

Third, this project reflects the invaluable intellectual assistance of Alberta M. Sbragia, Robert S. Walters, Ronald A. Brand, Mark Hallerberg, Simon Reich, Alasdair Young, Giandomenico Majone and Mark Pollack. I also must thank Kenneth J. Grieb for stimulating my interest in international politics and Youri Devuyt for helping to develop my thinking about EU–US competition relations generally.

Fourth, I am indebted to the publishers at Palgrave. Their encouragement helped to drive this project, their constant support helped to ease the rethinking and redrafts, and their professional guidance assured the completion of the manuscript. In particular, I owe a great debt of gratitude to Philippa Grand, Alison Howson and Tim Shea.

Fifth, Ief Daems deserves special mention for his research assistance on this book. He dedicated himself to this project and undertook research on his own initiative to improve the content and quality of the arguments. Every author should be so lucky to have an assistant such as Ief.

Sixth, I am eternally grateful to a number of friends and family for making my life easier as I pursued this project. Among them are Greg Baudin-O'Hayon, Sascha Barth, Alex Grigorescu, John Hoornebeek, Amy Langham, Pilar Luaces Méndez, Stephanie Maclean, Mary Malone, Dave Manel, Georg Menz, Forrest Morgeson, Mark Wintz, the staff in the University of Pittsburgh's Department of Political Science and my brothers – Wess, Nathan and Nik, including with high honours, Korey, Melissa and Starr. A very special thanks goes out to Mary and Denny Rusinow for providing the environment in which these ideas originated and Cecilia Decurtins for making it worthwhile.

And, finally, this book is dedicated to my parents, Linda and David Damro, without whose various unwavering forms of support this project would not have been possible. While I retain full responsibility for any errors, positive comments on the work that appears on the following pages should be directed towards these two wonderful people.
