

Palgrave Macmillan Memory Studies

Series Editors: Andrew Hoskins and John Sutton

International Advisory Board: Steven Brown, University of Leicester, UK, Mary Carruthers, New York University, USA, Paul Connerton, University of Cambridge, UK, Astrid Erll, University of Wuppertal, Germany, Robyn Fivush, Emory University, USA, Tilmann Habermas, University of Frankfurt am Main, Germany, Jeffrey Olick, University of Virginia, USA, Susannah Radstone, University of East London, UK, Ann Rigney, Utrecht University, Netherlands

The nascent field of Memory Studies emerges from contemporary trends that include a shift from concern with historical knowledge of events to that of memory, from 'what we know' to 'how we remember it'; changes in generational memory; the rapid advance of technologies of memory; panics over declining powers of memory, which mirror our fascination with the possibilities of memory enhancement; and the development of trauma narratives in reshaping the past.

These factors have contributed to an intensification of public discourses on our past over the last thirty years. Technological, political, interpersonal, social and cultural shifts affect what, how and why people and societies remember and forget. This groundbreaking series tackles questions such as: What is 'memory' under these conditions? What are its prospects, and also the prospects for its interdisciplinary and systematic study? What are the conceptual, theoretical and methodological tools for its investigation and illumination?

Aleida Assmann and Sebastian Conrad (editors)

MEMORY IN A GLOBAL AGE

Discourses, Practices and Trajectories

Aleida Assmann and Linda Shortt (editors)

MEMORY AND POLITICAL CHANGE

Brian Conway

COMMEMORATION AND BLOODY SUNDAY

Pathways of Memory

Richard Crownshaw

THE AFTERLIFE OF HOLOCAUST MEMORY IN CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE AND CULTURE

Astrid Erll

MEMORY IN CULTURE

Anne Fuchs

AFTER THE DRESDEN BOMBING

Pathways of Memory, 1945 to the Present

Yifat Gutman, Adam D. Brown and Amy Sodaro (editors)

MEMORY AND THE FUTURE

Transnational Politics, Ethics and Society

Amy Holdsworth

TELEVISION, MEMORY AND NOSTALGIA

Mikyoung Kim and Barry Schwartz (editors)

NORTHEAST ASIA'S DIFFICULT PAST

Essays in Collective Memory

Irial Glynn and J. Olaf Kleist (editors)

HISTORY, MEMORY AND MIGRATION

Perceptions of the Past and the Politics of Incorporation

Erica Lehrer, Cynthia E. Milton and Monica Eileen Patterson (editors)

CURATING DIFFICULT KNOWLEDGE

Violent Pasts in Public Places

Motti Neiger, Oren Meyers and Eyal Zandberg (editors)

ON MEDIA MEMORY

Collective Memory in a New Media Age

V. Seidler

REMEMBERING DIANA

Cultural Memory and the Reinvention of Authority

Evelyn B. Tribble and Nicholas Keene

COGNITIVE ECOLOGIES AND THE HISTORY OF REMEMBERING

Religion, Education and Memory in Early Modern England

Forthcoming titles:

Owain Jones and Joanne Garde-Hansen (editors)

GEOGRAPHY AND MEMORY

Exploring Identity, Place and Becoming

Emily Keightley and Michael Pickering

CREATIVE MEMORY

Palgrave Macmillan Memory Studies

Series Standing Order ISBN 978-0-230-23851-0 (hardback) 978-0-230-23852-7 (paperback)

(outside North America only)

You can receive future titles in this series as they are published by placing a standing order. Please contact your bookseller or, in case of difficulty, write to us at the address below with your name and address, the title of the series and the ISBNs quoted above.

Customer Services Department, Macmillan Distribution Ltd, Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 6XS, England

History, Memory and Migration

Perceptions of the Past and the Politics of Incorporation

Edited by

Irial Glynn

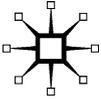

University College Dublin, Ireland

and

J. Olaf Kleist

Free University of Berlin, Germany

palgrave
macmillan

Introduction, selection and editorial matter © Irial Glynn and
J. Olaf Kleist 2012
Foreword © Jay Winter 2012
Individual chapters © Contributors 2012
Softcover reprint of the hardcover 1st edition 2012 978-0-230-29338-0

All rights reserved. No reproduction, copy or transmission of this publication may be made without written permission.

No portion of this publication may be reproduced, copied or transmitted save with written permission or in accordance with the provisions of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, or under the terms of any licence permitting limited copying issued by the Copyright Licensing Agency, Saffron House, 6–10 Kirby Street, London EC1N 8TS.

Any person who does any unauthorized act in relation to this publication may be liable to criminal prosecution and civil claims for damages.

The authors have asserted their rights to be identified as the authors of this work in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

First published 2012 by
PALGRAVE MACMILLAN

Palgrave Macmillan in the UK is an imprint of Macmillan Publishers Limited, registered in England, company number 785998, of Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 6XS.

Palgrave Macmillan in the US is a division of St Martin's Press LLC, 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10010.

Palgrave Macmillan is the global academic imprint of the above companies and has companies and representatives throughout the world.

Palgrave® and Macmillan® are registered trademarks in the United States, the United Kingdom, Europe and other countries

ISBN 978-1-349-33283-0 ISBN 978-1-137-01023-0 (eBook)
DOI 10.1057/9781137010230

This book is printed on paper suitable for recycling and made from fully managed and sustained forest sources. Logging, pulping and manufacturing processes are expected to conform to the environmental regulations of the country of origin.

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

A catalog record for this book is available from the Library of Congress.

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1
21 20 19 18 17 16 15 14 13 12

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Foreword
Jay Winter	viii
Notes on Contributors	xii

Introduction

1 The Memory and Migration Nexus: An Overview Irial Glynn and J. Olaf Kleist	3
--	---

Part I Migrant Memories

2 Cultures of History: The New Left, South Asians, and Historical Memory in Post-War England Kevin Myers	33
3 'I am also a Foreigner, but with Me it's Different': Polish Displaced Persons, War Memory and Ethnification in Belgium Machteld Venken	49
4 Using History to Relate: How Teenagers in Germany Use History to Orient between Nationalities Josefine Raasch	68

Part II Memories in Diverse Societies

5 Caught between Two Worlds: The Europeans of Algeria in France after 1962 Michèle Baussant	87
6 Remembering Egypt: Evangelicals, Conservatism and Immigration in America Hans Leaman	106
7 Past Migrations, Contemporary Representations and Complex Multicultures in London Mary J. Hickman	138

- 8 African Asylum Seekers and the Changing Politics of Memory in Israel 154
Moriel Ram and Haim Yacobi

Part III Migration Memories and the State

- 9 Famine Commemorations and Asylum Debates
in Ireland Conflated 173
Irial Glynn
- 10 Migrant Incorporation and Political Memories:
Transformations of Civic and Communal Belonging in Australia since 1949 189
J. Olaf Kleist
- 11 Songs for the Nation: Migrant Pasts and Global Futures in Singapore 214
Kelvin E.Y. Low
- Conclusion
- 12 History, Memory and Migration: Comparisons,
Challenges and Outlooks 237
Irial Glynn and J. Olaf Kleist
- Index* 245

Acknowledgements

We would like to thank Marlou Schrover of Leiden University for enabling us to develop our original idea at the European Social Science History Conference in Ghent in 2010. Thanks also to Ed Berenson of the CNRS-NYU Memory and Memorialisation programme and Klaus Neumann of Swinburne Institute for Social Research. We would like to acknowledge Patrick H. Murray of Ohio for very kindly allowing us to reproduce his photo as our book cover. We are indebted to Jay Winter of Yale University for taking the time out to read the manuscript and to provide his thoughtful foreword. We appreciate the hard work, patience and advice of Catherine Mitchell and Felicity Plester of Palgrave Macmillan, as well as Vidhya Jayaprakash's copyediting team, who helped to make this book project become a reality. We are particularly grateful for the comments of the external reviewer of this book, which we found extremely insightful. Finally, we would like to extend our gratitude to the individual contributors of this book who put in a lot of time and effort to help us see this project through to completion.

Foreword

We live in a period when the volume and variety of migration flows are as great as any in the past. One reason we must adopt a different optic in the field of memory studies is that the social context in which we think about the subject is changing. From the time of Ernest Renan at the end of the nineteenth century to Benedict Anderson's seminal study of imagined communities, the nation state and the mobilising power of nationalism have provided the force and focus of several generations of scholarship on memory and remembrance.

Since the 1960s, however, a different international environment has emerged. In some respects, what we term 'globalisation' is merely the reiteration of trends already in motion before the First World War, but the huge movements of capital, goods and labour in the late twentieth century and after present us with a changing demographic landscape. To be sure, the nation state has not died, but its power has been eroded, in part by a surge in emigration from what we now term globally 'the South' – Africa, South Asia and Latin America – to 'the North' – Europe and the United States. An unspecified but very large part of this population movement from developing to developed nations is illegal. That is, people are moving from developing to developed nations through normal visa channels if they can, but through illicit channels when they must.

This dramatic trend in population movement is a challenge to the integrity of the nation state. In many parts of the world, the state is less that institution that has the authority to declare war than that institution which has the power to determine who enters its territory. That power is now in question. The result is the presence among us of very large silent populations – silent because they are not supposed to be here. Such people occupy menial jobs in developed economies and constitute a huge reservoir of poorly paid labour. Speaking up would call attention to their illicit presence. They are silent, too, in that they have no political voice in the country to which they have come. On occasion, that can mean they have no rights at all and face hostility, harassment, arrest and deportation. Stephen Frears' 2002 film Dirty Pretty Things opened a window onto this subterranean world, one that is hard to look at.

Our silence about the presence of these migrants among us is something on which we should reflect. If you travel to any major city, anywhere in the developed world, take an evening off, dine in a local café, and you are likely to be in the company of these newcomers, just off stage, washing dishes or cleaning up. Most of the time, we too are silent about them, preferring to avoid a direct confrontation with the problem of undocumented immigrants, who consequently lead a shadow life, filled with dangers and uncertainties.

This changing demographic reality is bound to affect the way we look at the nation state and the historical questions we ask about our common cultural heritage. If memory and forgetting bracketed our understanding of nationhood and nationalism at the high water mark of what Charles Maier termed the age of territoriality, then it may be possible to see that now, in a transnational age, it makes sense not to dispense with memory and forgetting, but to develop a wider vocabulary to explore the sphere of signifying practices surrounding identity, community, migration and ethnicity in the contemporary world.

The search for that vocabulary is the subject of this book. Some of it is state-driven. Policymakers and politicians tend to treat the subject of migration as if it were radioactive. Votes are lost every time someone opines on the need to restrict, control or enforce migration quotas. Consequently, the lead in this area has devolved to smaller units of aggregation – to cities, towns, villages, neighbourhoods, streets, families. Local associations are more important than national groups in negotiating the space of lived experience between newcomers and long-term indigenous residents. Salient among these organisations are the churches, whose transnational character make them natural supporters of the right of migrants to seek work where they find it and their right to reunite with their families, composed of earlier migrants who send remittances for the benefit of their family members at home, across the border, but who may very well decide never to go ‘home’ again.

For millions, exile is their homeland. That is, there is a substantial population who may have migrated with one set of intentions – to return some day with savings enabling them to build a house or live in one built with their earlier remittances – but who have changed their mind over time. Their status is neither here nor there, but in between; they live in a kind of cultural and political no-man’s land. Those who cross borders illegally don’t have the right to vote in their new place of residence, though they may retain their right to vote in their countries of origin. They are also still tied to their birthplace in a host of ways – through religion, language, dress, festivals, and in countless other ways. Their interest is not in assimilating, but rather in constructing a hybrid, liminal identity, where, for instance, they earn American wages, but in their heads and in their churches, they live in ‘Mexico’.

The challenge for the future is to go beyond the notion of control and assimilation as the poles of migration studies, and to explore these populations, some of whom have legal status in their country of residence, but many do not. Between isolation and assimilation there is a third option, now chosen by millions of people, to have plural identities, to live lives in two countries at the same time, not in a physical sense, but in a cultural sense. They work 'here', but in all the most important matters of their daily life, they are stilling living 'there'. It is in this complex set of loyalties and iron necessities that we must locate the hybridisation of the twenty-first century. Families by the millions are hybrids of those with the right to be where they live, and of those who have no such right, but who live 'here' anyway. The central divide in these families and communities is not only geographical, but even more so, legal, between those who cross borders legally, and those who do not. Legal migrants can take the path to assimilation, if they choose to do so. Undocumented migrants cannot.

This legal split is of fundamental importance for our understanding of memory formation. Halbwachs taught us that collective memory is the memory of different collectives, rather than that of the state. As collectives change, he wrote, so does memory, as a linguistically shared and performed expression of group identity. But nothing in Halbwachs has prepared us for the legal divide between millions of migrants who cross borders illegally, and who live a shadow existence alongside legally constituted temporary migrants or guest workers and those with rights or residence who choose to assimilate and possibly to obtain citizenship in their new abode.

In this reconfiguration of memory and migration studies, we need to follow Halbwachs in another way. We are never the first to know who we are, Halbwachs told us. Our families do so. But what happens to notions of memory when grandparents are in Mexico and their children and grandchildren are in Connecticut. One-quarter of the population of the town in which I live, New Haven, is in this position. Who tells the children who they are? Whose memories are collective? Those of legal immigrants or undocumented ones? Those of absent grandparents or of those told to migrants' children by priests, teachers, neighbours? It would be foolish to assume this is an exceptional case. It is happening all over the world.

We are, it is apparent, at a crossroads today. Collections of perceptive and rigorously documented essays such as those in this book are essential steps towards a reconfiguration of the way we understand the overlap between migration and memory. We should be grateful to these scholars for throwing considerable light on the discursive and experiential field surrounding migrants. Now is the time to go one step further, and explore the dark world, the silent world, inhabited by those who legally are not here (wherever here is), but whom we simply cannot ignore. They are legion.

Jay Winter
January 2012

Contributors

Michèle Baussant works at the CNRS as a researcher in Anthropology. Her main topics of research deal with memory, nostalgia, migration and heritage, especially among minorities who lived in Algeria (Europeans of Algeria) and Egypt (Jews of Egypt and Christian Lebanese and Syrians in Egypt) who fled these countries during or after decolonisation. She is the author of Pieds-noirs. Mémoires d'exils (2002) and the editor of Du vrai au juste: la mémoire, l'histoire et l'oubli (2006) and co-editor (with Jean-Pierre Peter) of Mémoires plurielles, mémoires en conflit (2007).

Irial Glynn received his PhD from the European University Institute, Florence. He has held visiting fellowships at Oxford University and New York University. He specialises in migration history and sports history. He teaches at University College Dublin. His publications include articles in Modern Asian Studies and the Journal of Refugee Studies as well UCD and the Sigerson (2011).

Mary J. Hickman is Professor of Irish Studies and Sociology and Director of the Institute for the Study of European Transformations at London Metropolitan University. She has been a visiting professor at New York University, Columbia University, Victoria University, Melbourne and University College Dublin. Her research interests centre on migrations and diasporas, second and third generations, national (re)formations and representations and identifications of minority ethnic communities. In 2012 her book (with Nick Mai and Helen Crowley) Migration and Social Cohesion in the UK will be published by Palgrave Macmillan.

J. Olaf Kleist wrote and defended his doctoral dissertation in Political Science at Freie Universität Berlin. He was a visiting fellow at the Institute for Social Research, Swinburne University in Melbourne and at the Refugee Studies Centre, University of Oxford. He has published about memory, migration and politics and his principal research interest focuses on how political memory and belonging are linked with the politics of immigration and refugee protection.

Hans B. Leaman is a PhD candidate in History and Renaissance Studies at Yale University. He also received a JD from Yale Law School. His research interests focus on theological interpretations of exile and asylum since the Reformation era, embracing the migration of religious refugees and the development of migration rights.

Kelvin E.Y. Low is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the National University of Singapore. He received his PhD from the Faculty of Sociology, University of Bielefeld, Germany. He is the author of Scents and Scent-sibilities: Smell and Everyday Life Experiences (2009), and the co-editor (with Devorah Kalekin-Fishman) of Everyday Life in Asia: Social Perspectives on the Senses (2010). His current research project focuses on the Nepalese Gurkhas from the perspective of a multi-sited ethnography.

Kevin Myers is Senior Lecturer in Social History and Education at the University of Birmingham. His research interests are memory, migration and multicultural education.

Josefine Raasch worked for 13 years with children and teenagers as a physiotherapist. She then studied European Ethnology and Education (both to Master's level) at Humboldt University in Berlin, Germany. Josefine is working on teenagers' enactment of historical knowledge in the classroom at the Swinburne Institute for Social Research in Australia. She contributed a chapter to a book on how old people deal with increasing immobility, and a book on how children deal with obesity (Dicksein: Wie Kinder damit umgehen, 2010).

Moriel Ram is a PhD student in the Department of Politics and Government at Ben-Gurion University where he teaches courses on Israeli geopolitics. His research deals with the question of contested spaces and their territorial process, mainly focusing on a comparative analysis of Israel and Turkey.

Machteld Venken holds a Master's in Slavic Studies and a PhD in History from the Catholic University of Leuven (KU Leuven), and spends much of her time in Poland, Russia and the Ukraine. She is a senior postdoctoral researcher/Lise Meitner Fellow at the Ludwig Boltzmann Institute for European History and the Public Sphere in Vienna. She is the author of Straddling the Iron Curtain? Immigrants, Immigrant Organisations, War Memories (2011).

Haim Yacobi is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Politics and Government at Ben-Gurion University and a Marie-Curie fellow at Cambridge University. As an architect and planner who specialised in geography, his academic work focuses on the urban as a political, social and cultural entity. The main issues at the centre of his published articles and books are the interrelations between urban space and social justice, the politics of identity, migration, globalisation and planning. In 1999 he formulated the idea of establishing 'Bimkom – Planners for Planning Rights' (NGO) and was its co-founder. His latest co-authored book (with Erez Tzfadia) is Rethinking Israeli Space (2011).