ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We would like to thank the Association of Chinese Political Studies for its support of the international symposium entitled “100 Years after the 1911 Chinese Revolution: Reflections and Forecasts”—held at King’s College London (KCL) during 17–19 June 2011—from which this book is an outgrowth. We also would like to express our sincere gratitude to the Mr. & Mrs. S.H. Wong Foundation, the King’s China Institute (now Lau China Institute), Professor Keith Hoggart, Professor Xinzhong Yao, and Dr. Ralph Parfect. Without these institutions and individuals’ financial, administrative, and moral backing, we would not have had such an intellectually and professionally rewarding symposium. Jean-Marc further thanks East China Normal University’s School of Advanced International and Area Studies, the School of International and Public Affairs at Shanghai Jiaotong University and Stanford University’s Shorenstein Asia-Pacific Research Center for providing the intellectual environment needed to develop and consummate this project. Jean-Marc would like to express his thanks to his co-editor, Kun-Chin, whose positive attitude, wide-ranging knowledge, and management of book contributors were critical to bringing both the workshop and this book to a successful conclusion. Kun-Chin thanks each of the authors for their patience and diligence in the preparation of their contributions, and owes a major debt of gratitude to Jean-Marc for generously offering his time and experience as the co-editor. He is deeply grateful that Professor Vivienne Shue and Professor Roderick MacFarquhar were able to attend the workshop, for they have been chief inspirations in his study of contemporary Chinese politics. Together with Professor Shue as pillars of the University of Oxford Contemporary China

Studies Programme supported by the Leverhulme Trust, Dame Jessica Rawson and Professor Rana Mitter at Oxford have inspired many of us to think more historically in our work. The Department of Politics and International Studies of the University of Cambridge has provided the ideal setting for the completion of this book.
