This research was originally conceived in 2005 when I was a PhD student. After a gestation of nearly seven years, this book was born following a labour of love, sweat and tears (but without any of those glorious pain-numbing drugs). There are many people who have made this work possible in innumerable ways.

Many thanks to Associate Professors Maila Stivens and JaneMaree Maher, for being stalwarts of support as I carried out this research during my PhD candidature and beyond; Dr. Kim Toffoletti, who has been an invaluable source of encouragement, mentorship and friendship; my colleagues in Sociology at the University of Tasmania and, in particular, Associate Professor Douglas Ezzy, for allowing me time to write; my friends for their sincere encouragement, despite, in many cases, having no actual interest in my book (you know, the ones who say, 'Ooh, you're writing a book?', and then when you tell them what it is about, you can see their eyes start to glaze over); Andrea Michaelson, however, has been unwavering in her support – how could I live without you? This book has also benefitted greatly from careful and patient proofreading by friends and colleagues scattered across the globe. My tired eyes cannot thank you enough; and, finally the publishing and editorial staff at Palgrave Macmillan in the UK. In particular, I would like to thank my publisher, Philippa Grand, for believing in the value of this work. Thanks also to Andrew James for his patience with my endless questions about the publishing process.

I am also grateful for the love and support of my family – thanks to my mum, Susan, for always being my biggest fan. Thanks also to my partner Christopher, for everything, really.

The publication of this book has depended upon the kindness and generosity of a very special group of women. I am indebted to the 38 women in Melbourne who generously shared their stories of pregnancy with me, a total stranger. Thank you for giving me your time, for opening up your homes, for the countless cups of tea and for making me a part of such a momentous time in your lives. I hope I have given your stories the respect they deserve. This book is for you and your babies (who are now on the verge of turning six years old – how time flies!).

Finally, I am grateful to the publishers of the following articles and chapters, who granted permission to reproduce parts of them for this book:
