This book has been a long time coming and I owe a debt of gratitude to many friends and colleagues who encouraged and supported my efforts over the years. This includes archivists and librarians at the Bodleian Library, British Library, British Library Newspapers Colindale, Cambridge University Library, Corporation of London Record Office, Finsbury Library, Guildhall Library, Institute of Historical Research, London Metropolitan Archives, Museum of London Picture Library, National Archives and Tower Hamlets Library.

I consider myself lucky to have a great group of colleagues in Cultural Studies at Leeds Beckett University, including my fellow historians, Matthew Caygill, Helen Dampier, Kelly Hignett, Simon Morgan and Rachael Rich. Particular thanks go to Shane Ewen, Grainne Goodwin, Stephen Mosley, Alison Oram and Ruth Robbins all of whom have either read parts of the book or provided a sounding board about the book at various stages. The Leeds Beckett University Centre for Culture and the Arts paid for the cover image, illustration and maps. I'd also like to thank my former colleagues and continuing friends at the Universities of Portsmouth and Northampton – Brad Beaven, Ken Lunn, Cathy Smith, Matthew Taylor and the late Bob Kiehl.

The research for and writing of a book benefits from the discussions we have as historians. I've been very lucky to count amongst my friends and advisors the following, who have kindly read various parts of the book during its long gestation: Andrew Davies, Barry Godfrey, Drew Gray, Louise Jackson, Tim Hitchcock, Dick Hobbs, Bob Shoemaker, Stefan Slater and John Carter Wood. I owe special thanks to two of those friends. Tim Hitchcock, who has been generous with his time and support since he first taught me as an undergraduate at the Polytechnic of North London, and Louise Jackson, who has gently but firmly encouraged me to finally finish this book.

I have also benefitted from discussions with friends and colleagues who have advised and provided intellectual support over the years, notably John Beattie, Alyson Brown, Carl Chinn, Mary Clayton, Penelope Corfield, Pam Cox, Clive Emsley, Nathasha Glaisyer, Gordon Johnston, Helen Johnston, Peter King, John Langbein, Emma Robertston, Helen Rogers, Lisa Taylor, Suzie Thomas, Janice Turner and Chris Williams. I would also like to thank my editors at Palgrave Macmillan, Jen McCall and Holly Tyler, for their patience and ‘chivvyng’. My thanks are also extended to the anonymous reader at Palgrave. Finally, I would like to thank my family, Tim Shore, Ian Shore and their respective partners, Gary and Laura, and also Heather, Colin and Isla for ‘putting me up’.

The cover image from G. Doré, ‘Wentworth Street, Whitechapel, 1872’, from G. Doré and B. Jerrold, London A Pilgrimage: With Illustrations by Gustave Doré (London) is from the Museum of London. The illustration on p. 58 is by William Hogarth, A Harlot’s Progress, Plate 3, 1732, with the permission of The Trustees of the British Museum. The maps on pp. 51, 95 and 177 are from the London Metropolitan Archives, City of London. I would particularly like to thank Jeremy Smith for his help in selecting them. An earlier version of Chapter 3 was published in article form in the journal Social History, which has kindly given permission for it to be republished in a revised form here. (H. Shore (2009), ‘“The Reckoning”: Disorderly Women, Informing Constables and the Westminster Justices, 1727–1733’, Social History, 34, pp. 409–27.) Some parts of Chapter 8 were first used in article form in H. Shore (2011), ‘Criminality and Englishness in the Aftermath: The Racecourse Wars of the 1920s’, Twentieth Century British History, 22, 4, pp. 474–97.
