Rhetoric lies at the intersection of a variety of disciplinary approaches and methods, drawing upon the study of language, history, culture and philosophy to understand the persuasive aspects of communication in all its modes: spoken, written, argued, depicted and performed. This series presents the best international research in rhetoric that develops and exemplifies the multifaceted and cross-disciplinary exploration of practices of persuasion and communication. It seeks to publish texts that openly explore and expand rhetorical knowledge and enquiry, be it in the form of historical scholarship, theoretical analysis or contemporary cultural and political critique. The editors welcome proposals for monographs that explore contemporary rhetorical forms, rhetorical theories and thinkers, and rhetorical themes inside and across disciplinary boundaries. For informal enquiries, questions, as well as submitting proposals, please contact the editors: Alan Finlayson: a.finlayson@uea.ac.uk James Martin: j.martin@gold.ac.uk Kendall Phillips: kphillip@syr.edu

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book took rather longer to complete than I intended, and I am extremely grateful to my editors at Palgrave Macmillan—Ambra Finotello and Imogen Gordon Clark—for their patience. I also wish to acknowledge the generous support provided by a British Academy/Leverhulme Small Research Grant (award number SG121411), and Coventry University for giving me sabbatical leave in the final stage of the project. The book draws on and develops the arguments presented in two earlier articles, and I thank John Wiley and Sons and SAGE Publications Ltd for permission to reuse this material.

A number of ideas were first tried out at various conferences—including the American Political Science Association, the Rhetoric Society of Europe, the UK Political Studies Association and the one-day event that formed part of this project—and I would like to express my gratitude to participants for their insightful comments and questions. Special thanks are due to the following, who pushed me to refine my thinking on the Coalition and provided much-needed encouragement: Jonathan Dean, Alan Finlayson, John Gaffney, Simon Griffiths, Sophia Hatzisavvidou, Stuart McAnulla, Libby McEnhill, Jim Martin, Dai Moon, David Seawright, Kevin Theakston and Nick Turnbull. I am also indebted to my colleagues in the School of Humanities at Coventry for their support and friendship.

Last but by no means least, I remain deeply grateful to my mum, sister, step-father and my second family, Julia and Ian Garrett, for their unstinting love and support. It means the world to me and I am truly lucky to have you all in my life. However, this book would not have been written without my daughter, Rhianydd. From listening patiently while I tried to get my thoughts straight at the beginning of the project, to tidying up the reference lists at its end, and for being a source of strength and encouragement throughout, I dedicate the book to her.
