Palgrave Studies in Nineteenth-Century Writing and Culture is a new monograph series that aims to represent the most innovative research on literary works that were produced in the English-speaking world from the time of the Napoleonic Wars to the fin de siècle. Attentive to the historical continuities between 'Romantic' and 'Victorian', the series will feature studies that help scholarship to reassess the meaning of these terms during a century marked by diverse cultural, literary, and political movements. The main aim of the series is to look at the increasing influence of types of historicism on our understanding of literary forms and genres. It reflects the shift from critical theory to cultural history that has affected not only the period 1800–1900 but also every field within the discipline of English literature. All titles in the series seek to offer fresh critical perspectives and challenging readings of both canonical and non-canonical writings of this era.

Titles include:

Eitan Bar-Yosef and Nadia Valman (editors)

Acknowledgments

I could not have completed this book without the support of numerous individuals and organizations. This book started at the University of Missouri at Columbia where I was fortunate enough to have many encouraging advisors, including Noah Heringman, Devoney Looser, Theodore Koditschek, Patricia Okker, and most especially Nancy West. These readers of the initial inklings of this book spent innumerable hours helping me hone my ideas and my writing; they also offered me the encouragement and some of the essential questions that allowed me to write this book. The book was composed at Penn State Altoona, where my colleagues and friends in English, History, and Communications, most notably Kenneth Womack, Brian Black, and William White, have acted as critics and champions of my work. Penn State Altoona as well as Penn State's Institute of Arts and Humanities have also been immensely generous with research support that allowed me to spend many hours in the British Royal Mail Library and Archive as well as the British Library's Newspaper Library, where archivists and research librarians generously offered assistance, support, and engaging conversation when my eyes could no longer focus on the aged newsprint. I have been lucky too to be a part of a vital community of Victorianists whose invigorating conversations at INCS, NAVSA, BAVS, and RSVP conferences have integrally shaped my belief in and excitement for this project. I regret that I do not have space to thank all who have talked with me about letters but I cannot fail to mention Kate Flint (and all my fellow Jude NEH Summer Scholars), Deborah Denenholz Morse, Teresa Mangum, and Lise Sanders, whom I count as friends and respect as scholars and who have offered invaluable comments on and inspiration for my writing. Kate Thomas deserves special mention; her interest in letters has not only spurred my own writing but her phrase 'postal plots' stands as my title. I thank her for her intellectual and personal generosity. I also count myself as extremely fortunate to have had Joseph Bristow as a reader of my manuscript; his enthusiasm and guidance supported me through the final stages of this book. Many thanks are due Benjamin Doyle for his thorough answers to my queries and Monica Kendall for her meticulous attention to my manuscript.

I would also like to thank the British Royal Mail Library and Archive for permission to quote manuscript sources and copyright material.

Chapter 2 was published in an earlier form as ‘The Long History of “In Short”: Mr. Micawber, Letter-Writers, and Literary Men’, in Victorian Literature and Culture 33.2 (2005): 415–33, and is reprinted with the kind permission of Cambridge University Press.

Finally, I extend some very personal thanks. My friends at Progressive Martial Arts – most notably Maggie Albright, Rocco Alianiello, Cathy Anderson, Becky Diehl, Michelle Gardner, and Lauren and Jeremy Hillard – have supported, celebrated, and pushed me in ways that have made the composition of this book possible. Eric Leuschner offered essential early encouragement, editorial acumen, and friendship, and Cynthia Vessey has continued to be supportive of me and this project for the many years of its development. My parents, Martin and June Rotunno, gave me the love and support that made me want to read and write, and their pride in me makes me continue. There are two final friends without whom this book would not have been possible. Without Jeffrey J. Williams this book would not have been completed. His unwavering rigor, his editorial insight, and his unstinting honesty and humor made me rewrite with certain belief that I would finally say something important about letters. And Doug Page has lived alongside me and this book with a patience and love that astounds and delights me everyday.
