

Histories of the Sacred and Secular, 1700-2000

Series Editor

Professor David Nash
Oxford Brookes University
Oxford, UK

This series reflects the awakened and expanding profile of the history of religion within the academy in recent years. It intends publishing exciting new and high quality work on the history of religion and belief since 1700 and will encourage the production of interdisciplinary proposals and the use of innovative methodologies. The series will also welcome book proposals on the history of Atheism, Secularism, Humanism and unbelief/secularity and to encourage research agendas in this area alongside those in religious belief. The series will be happy to reflect the work of new scholars entering the field as well as the work of established scholars. The series welcomes proposals covering subjects in Britain, Europe, the United States and Oceania.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank the staff at the Mitchell Library in Glasgow, Glasgow University Library, the Scottish Catholic Archive in Edinburgh, the National Library of Scotland, the National Records of Scotland and officials of the Scottish Senatus of the Legion of Mary. Personal thanks are due to Mr Jack McGavigan who gratefully loaned me his personal papers from his time as chairman of the Glasgow Newman Circle and Mary McHugh of the Glasgow Archdiocesan Archive for guidance on the archives. A big thank you is due to Professor David Nash who championed the manuscript as part of the Histories of the Sacred and Secular Series and allowed for this work to finally see the light of day. Many thanks to Jade Moulds who was very patient with me and my liberal attitude to deadlines. A big thank you goes to my colleagues and students at Bath Spa University and before that at the University of Strathclyde. Lots of people contributed in so many different ways to this work from the O'Hara family whose faith was much in mind when I first thought of this project, to my good friend Murray Kerr who helped to take my mind off of it when it was getting too heavy. Most of all thanks goes to my family and especially love to Anne Marie who was always there for me.
