

Contemporary Adulthood and the Night-Time Economy

Leisure Studies in a Global Era

Series Editors:

Karl Spracklen, Professor of Leisure Studies, Leeds Metropolitan University, UK

Karen Fox, Professor of Leisure Studies, University of Alberta, Canada

In this book series, we defend leisure as a meaningful, theoretical, framing concept; and critical studies of leisure as a worthwhile intellectual and pedagogical activity. This is what makes this book series distinctive: we want to enhance the discipline of leisure studies and open it up to a richer range of ideas; and, conversely, we want sociology, cultural geographies and other social sciences and humanities to open up to engaging with critical and rigorous arguments from leisure studies. Getting beyond concerns about the grand project of leisure, we will use the series to demonstrate that leisure theory is central to understanding wider debates about identity, postmodernity and globalisation in contemporary societies across the world. The series combines the search for local, qualitatively rich accounts of everyday leisure with the international reach of debates in politics, leisure and social and cultural theory. In doing this, we will show that critical studies of leisure can and should continue to play a central role in understanding society. The scope will be global, striving to be truly international and truly diverse in the range of authors and topics.

Thanks are due to a number of people, some without whom I would have been unable to start this book, and others without whom it would never have been finished. Particular thanks go to Simon Winlow, whose work has been invaluable in helping me define and explore many of the ideas contained herein, and also for taking the time to read and comment on drafts of this book.

Thanks also to a number of friends and colleagues, particularly Rowland Atkinson, Dean Wilson and Chris Pac-Soo, who were integral to either aiding the completion of this book or at least providing a welcome distraction from it.

Thanks to my mum and dad, whose constant support and encouragement has been invaluable.

Thanks of course to my wife, Clare, who accompanied me on fieldwork (I promise I will never take you to an 80s retro bar again), barely grumbled when I returned home from the field as she was getting up to go to work, and has endured the frustrations of sharing a life with someone writing to a deadline.

I would also like to thank those who tolerated my peculiar interest in their lives during my research. I owe you a pint.
