Palgrave Studies in the Enlightenment, Romanticism and Cultures of Print will feature work that does not fit comfortably within established boundaries—whether between periods or between disciplines. Uniquely, it will combine efforts to engage the power and materiality of print with explorations of gender, race, and class. By attending as well to intersections of literature with the visual arts, medicine, law, and science, the series will enable a large-scale rethinking of the origins of modernity.

Many people and institutions have provided assistance and encouragement during the development and writing of this book. My interest in Romantic conservatism began during my graduate studies at Duke University. I owe a great debt to my dissertation advisor, Thomas Pfau, who challenged me to pursue my intellectual interests in conservatism. Thanks are also due to Rob Mitchell, who encouraged my early ideas about the environmental implications of conservatism. Other faculty and fellow students at Duke supported my work and sharpened my thinking: Monique Allewaert, Ian Baucom, Max Brzezinski, Nihad Farooq, Cara Hersh, and Susan Thorne. My dissertation focused on the aesthetics of Romantic conservatism. This book is a new project that was written during my years at James Madison University, where colleagues supported my research by reading chapter drafts and offering encouragement and knowledgeable guidance: Dabney Bankert, Dawn Goode, Laura Lewis, Chris Morris, Mark Parker, and Siân White have my gratitude. Thanks are also due to the generous community of scholars at the North American Society for the Study of Romanticism and the International Conference on Romanticism, where I presented drafts of several chapters. In particular I am indebted to the intellectual generosity and acumen of Ron Broglio, David L. Clark, David Collings, Allison Dushane, Elizabeth Fay, Michael Gamer, Noah Heringman, Scott Hess, Kevin Hutchings, Nick Mason, and Scott McEathron. Ghislaine McDayter, John Rickard, and Harold Schweizer offered insightful suggestions after a presentation at Bucknell University.

For their guidance in shaping the book, I thank the editors of Palgrave Studies in the Enlightenment, Romanticism, and Cultures of Print, Anne Mellor and Clifford Siskin. The detailed, thoughtful suggestions of the anonymous reviewers made this a more coherent, carefully argued book. Many thanks are also due to commissioning editor Ben Doyle and his assistant Sophie Ainscough for their patient direction through the publishing process. John Pollack, Lynne Farrington, and Elton Torres at the Rare Book and Manuscript Library, University of Pennsylvania assisted with my research. The engravings from Thomas Bewick's History of British Birds appear in this book due to their assistance and kind permission. Research materials were also provided by the David M. Rubenstein Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Duke University, and the Albert and Shirley Small Special Collections Library, University of Virginia. I am most grateful to the librarians at James Madison University's Carrier Library, who tirelessly facilitated my access to research materials. Without the support of Pete Bsumek, I would have been unable to complete this project; his criticism of the chapters sharpened the arguments, and the inter-generational optimism that stirs his activism inspires me.

Portions of the material in the introduction and first and second chapters originally appeared in "Romantic Conservation in Burke, Wordsworth, and Wendell Berry," SubStance #125, 40.2 (2011): 73–91. © 2011 by the Board of Regents of the University of Wisconsin System.
