Martin West, Harvard University

This series addresses a variety of topics in the area of education policy. Volumes are solicited primarily from social scientists with expertise on education, in addition to policymakers or practitioners with hands-on experience in the field. Topics of particular focus include state and national policy, teacher recruitment, retention, and compensation, urban school reform, test-based accountability, choice-based reform, school finance, higher education costs and access, the quality instruction in higher education, leadership and administration in K-12 and higher education, teacher colleges, the role of the courts in education policymaking, and the relationship between education research and practice. The series serves as a venue for presenting stimulating new research findings, serious contributions to ongoing policy debates, and accessible volumes that illuminate important questions or synthesize existing research.

Acknowledgments

This book is the product of a larger collaboration between the Education Commission of the States (ECS), the University of Massachusetts Boston, and Knowledge in the Public Interest. We were fortunate to be a part of the team for Getting Past Go (GPG), a national initiative designed to improve developmental education by working with higher education state and system leaders. The research presented in the book was, therefore, supported in part by an ECS grant funded by the Lumina Foundation of Education. We are especially indebted to Tina Gridiron who served as a supportive program officer for the project and to Bruce Vandal who directed the project and provided support and critique throughout the research.

Part of our responsibilities as part of the GPG team was to conduct case study research of five states, a task that required more than three individuals. We are especially grateful to the researchers who helped us with data collection, data analysis, and/or the production of this book, all but one of whom were graduate students. The contributions of the following must not go unnoticed: Laurie Bartell Behringer, Loni Bordoloi, Liya Escalera, Randi Korn, Ellise LaMotte, Lyssa Palu-ay, Kimberly Russell, Diann Simmons, and Tammy Vargas Warner.

Together, we conducted more than 100 interviews in five states in a relatively short period of time. This research would not have been possible if people were not willing to share their time and experiences with us. We therefore acknowledge all of those unnamed policymakers, system and institutional leaders who offered their time, wisdom, and insights to us during the interviews. Their tireless dedication to serving students within their states and institutions despite limited resources was evident and commendable.

On a more personal note, we are especially thankful to our many friends, families, and spouses, who helped to motivate, care, and support us throughout the research and writing process, in particular, Tim Barrett, Elizabeth Barrett, Joan and Bob Barrett, Dara Concagh, Heather Parker, Joseph and Mary Parker, Nikki Parker-Reese, Hope Reed, Kimberly Rogers, Maureen and Bill Sterk, and Jamara Wakefield.
