Trade policymaking tends to be a secretive enterprise. We would know little about the politics of trade and tobacco if not for the dedicated people who have collected and curated publicly available sources of data on the topic. Thank you to the hardworking people at Campaign for Tobacco Free Kids, Physicians for a Smoke Free Canada, ASH UK, the American Cancer Society, the American Lung Foundation, the Legacy Tobacco Documents Library, the UCSF Center for Tobacco Control Research and Education, the Center for Policy Analysis on Trade and Health, Simon Chapman and colleagues at the University of Sydney, and the Tobacco Control Research Group at the University of Bath for doing such good work.

I am indebted to Judith Schmidt and Daniel Rubin, who had the very good idea of writing a book on this topic, and whose thinking has informed my subsequent work, and to students Tiffany Huang, Katherine Truby, and Joseph Amodeo, who have all, at some point, helped me think about globalization and health.

I would like to thank colleagues and staff at the University of Michigan, particularly Peter Jacobson, Diana Bowman, Ken Warner, Cliff Douglas, and Connie Rockman for being so welcoming and for supporting my work. Many thanks also go to my friends at SUNY Albany, for giving me the safe environment I needed to start out as a new academic, and to Jennifer Fredette, for being an amazing colleague and friend, and for starring each and every one of my tweeted book updates.
Thank you also to Ed Page, my PhD supervisor at the London School of Economics, whose gifted copy of Schattschneider's Semi-sovereign People I used to write this book. I hope you like the result.
