As China's power grows, the search has begun in earnest for what super-power status will mean for the People's Republic of China as a nation as well as the impact of its new-found influence on the Asia-Pacific region and the global international order at large. By providing a venue for exciting and ground-breaking titles, the aim of this series is to explore the domestic and international implications of China's rise and transformation through a number of key areas including politics, development and foreign policy. The series will also give a strong voice to non-western perspectives on China's rise in order to provide a forum that connects and compares the views of academics from both the east and west reflecting the truly international nature of the discipline.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

This book is a product of my long-term interest in the study of policing in Greater China after 2009, when I first published a book on the politics of cross-border crime. I have to express my gratitude to Kenneth Ming, who helped me collect some data, and to two mainland experts on policing in China for sharing their views with me. I am also indebted to the former Hong Kong Police Commissioner Mr. Tang King-shing, Superintendent Wong Kin-wah and Senior Superintendent Tang Ping-keung for sharing all their opinions with me in March and June 2009. I must also thank Professor Jenny Fleming, the Editor of Policing & Society, for granting me the permission to reprint my following article in Chap. 2: “The Changing Context and Content of Policing in China and Hong Kong: Policy Transfer and Modernization,” Policing & Society, vol. 22, no. 2 (2012). I am indebted to Professor Lowell Dittmer, the Editor of Asian Survey, for allowing to reprint the following article in Chap. 3: “The Influence of Hong Kong’s Policing on China: Mechanisms of Knowledge Transfer,” Asian Survey, vol. 51, no. 4 (July/August 2011), pp. 770–784. Finally, I express my gratitude to Professor Shamsul Haque, the Editor of Asian Journal of Political Science, for granting me the permission to reprint the following article in Chap. 5: “The Politics of Policing the Anti-WTO Protests in Hong Kong,” Asian Journal of Political Science, vol. 14, no. 2 (2006). While these three articles have been slightly updated, all other chapters have been written exclusively for this book.

Finally, I dedicate this book to my late father, Lo Ho Leung.
