

IMAGINING TIME AND SPACE IN UNIVERSITIES

Curriculum Studies Worldwide

This series supports the internationalization of curriculum studies worldwide. At this historical moment, curriculum inquiry occurs within national borders. Like the founders of the International Association for the Advancement of Curriculum Studies, we do not envision a worldwide field of curriculum studies mirroring the standardization the larger phenomenon of globalization threatens. In establishing this series, our commitment is to provide support for complicated conversation within and across national and regional borders regarding the content, context, and process of education, the organizational and intellectual center of which is the curriculum.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is tricky to acknowledge the many people who have contributed to my journey that is the development of this book. I wouldn't possibly be able to name everyone I feel has been a part of this process. I trust that those who have been involved in this project, a life project to confuse and demystify my own world, will know who you are and will accept my profound gratitude.

However, there are a few who I must name. I have to start with Anita Sanyal, a great friend and scholar, who had the patience to read and edit my work, even while figuring out life as a new mom. Thanks so much for your time and the lovely and always funny comments on the side of the infinite pages I gave you to read. Laughing definitely is a good ingredient while writing.

I also want to acknowledge Fazal Rizvi, who sat with me during the early stages of the book and helped me sort out the important framing questions. I still remember a beautiful and profound sentence he said to me in Australia in January 2014 when I was struggling with why, and how to write this book. He said "now you have to write as there is no one watching you over your shoulders." There is so much to say about this and I am grateful for this and other wise insights that helped to propel me forward.

Of course, I must thank the editors, Janet Miller and Bill Pinar, who believed in this project from the beginning, as well as the editorial team from Palgrave. Thank you so much for the time and patience.
