Highlighting the work taking place at the crossroads of sociology, sexuality studies, gender studies, cultural studies, and performance studies, this series offers a platform for scholars pushing the boundaries of gender and sexuality studies substantively, theoretically, and stylistically. The authors draw on insights from diverse scholarship and research in popular culture, ethnography, history, cinema, religion, performance, new media studies, and technoscience studies to render visible the complex manner in which gender and sexuality intersect and can, at times, create tensions and fissures between one another. Encouraging breadth in terms of both scope and theme, the series editors seek works that explore the multifaceted domain of gender and sexuality in a manner that challenges the taken-for-granted. On one hand, the series foregrounds the pleasure, pain, politics, and aesthetics at the nexus of sexual practice and gendered expression. On the other, it explores new sites for the expression of gender and sexuality, the new geographies of intimacy being constituted at both the local and global scales.

Series Editors:

PATRICIA T. CLOUGH is Professor of Sociology and Women’s Studies at Queens College and The Graduate Center, CUNY. Clough is on the editorial boards of Women’s Studies Quarterly, Body and Society, Subjectivity, Cultural Studies/Critical Method, Qualitative Inquiry, and Women and Performance. Clough is the coeditor of Beyond Biopolitics: Essays in the Governance of Life and Death (with Craig Willse, 2011); author of The Affective Turn: Theorizing the Social (with Jean Halley, 2007); Autoaffection: Unconscious Thought in the Age of Teletechnology (2000); The End(s) of Ethnography: From Realism to Social Criticism (1998); Feminist Thought: Desire, Power and Academic Discourse (1994); The End(s) of Ethnography: From Realism to Social Criticism (1992).

R. DANIELLE EGAN is Professor and Chair of the Gender and Sexuality Studies Program at St. Lawrence University. Egan is the author of Dancing for Dollars and Paying for Love: The Relationships between Exotic Dancers and Their Regulars (2006) and coauthor of Theorizing the Sexual Child in Modernity (with Gail Hawkes, 2010), both with Palgrave Macmillan. She is also the coeditor of Flesh for Fantasy: Producing and Consuming Exotic Dance (with Katherine Frank and Merri Lisa Johnson, 2006). She is on the editorial board of Sexuality and Culture.

Titles:

Magnus Hirschfeld and the Quest for Sexual Freedom: A History of the First International Sexual Freedom Movement

Elena Mancini
Queer Voices: Vocality, the Uncanny, and Popular Music
Freya Jarman-Ivans

On the Literary Nonfiction of Nancy Mairs: A Critical Anthology
Edited by Merri Lisa Johnson and Susannah B. Mintz

Antarctica as Cultural Critique: The Gendered Politics of Scientific Exploration and Climate Change
Elena Glasberg

The Parallel Lives of Women and Cows: Meat Markets
Jean O’Malley Halley

Positioning Gender and Race in (Post)colonial Plantation Space: Connecting Ireland and the Caribbean
Eve Walsh Stoddard

A Critical Inquiry into Queer Utopias
Edited by Angela Jones

Young People and Pornography: Negotiating Pornification
Monique Mulholland

Juliet Mitchell and the Lateral Axis: Twenty-First-Century Psychoanalysis and Feminism
Edited by Robbie Duschinsky and Susan Walker

Women on the Role of Public Higher Education: Personal Reflections from CUNY’s Graduate Center
Edited by Deborah S. Gambs and Rose M. Kim

Sex, Ethics, and Young People
Moira Carmody

Postfeminist Digital Cultures: Femininity, Social Media, and Self-Representation
Amy Shields Dobson
Postfeminist Digital Cultures

Femininity, Social Media, and Self-Representation

Amy Shields Dobson
For GM
Contents

Acknowledgments ix

Chapter 1
Introduction 1

Chapter 2
Postfeminism, Girls and Young Women, and Digital Media 23

Part I   Sexual Self-Representations

Chapter 3
Heterosexuality Images on Social Network Sites 55

Chapter 4
Girls, Sexting, and Gender Politics 77

Part II   Valuable and Devalued Selves

Chapter 5
Postfeminist Self-Making: Textual Self-Representation and the Performance of “Authentic” Young Femininity on Social Network Sites 103

Chapter 6
Digital Girls in Crisis? Seeking Feedback and Representing Pain in Postfeminist Networked Publics 131

Afterword
Notes on Visibility and Self-Exposure 157
CONTENTS

Notes 167
Bibliography 171
Index 199
Acknowledgments

This book and the research projects it draws on have involved much work from others that I am greatly indebted to. In particular, Anita Harris has been an invaluable colleague and mentor, initially supervising my doctoral research, and continuing to provide feedback on drafts of several of the chapters in this book. I am most grateful for her razor-sharp intellect, her detailed and keenly perceptive feedback, and her generous all-round support. I am also most grateful to Denise Cuthbert for her ongoing mentorship and support. I am in awe of Denise’s insight and wisdom about so many pressing issues of our time, and her generosity, dedication, and critical eye as a scholar and research supervisor. Mark Davis and Grant Bollmer both kindly agreed to read chapters of this book and provided me with most insightful, crucial feedback. I am grateful for their time and passion for theory.

This manuscript is much indebted to Leo Keith, who has supported me with all things in life, work, and play (“support” may be an understatement). Leo helped proofread this manuscript, as well as download and categorize comments from YouTube, sort out computer-related problems and formatting issues along the way, and provided reassuring hugs at frequent intervals. His insights, time, and all-round love and care are invaluable. My parents, Candice Shields and Robert Dobson, also continue to provide me with the love and support that has enabled me to grow as a person and scholar, and I am indebted to them.

I’d like to thank all my colleagues and students in the Sociology Department and the Centre for Women’s and Gender Studies in the Monash School of Social Sciences. In particular, conversations with JaneMaree Maher and Akane Kanai at the Centre for Women’s and Gender Studies have been invaluable to my thinking over the past three years while I worked on this manuscript. I’d also like to thank Rachel Fensham, for getting me started and inspired on the path of feminist research, and Peter Snow, for all his help along the way. The Monash School of Social Sciences, the Sociology Department, and the Arts Faculty provided funds for the research on sexting and cybersafety discussed in chapter 4, as well as the research on YouTube videos discussed in chapter 6. My doctoral research was funded by an Australian Postgraduate Award scholarship, and I am most grateful for all of this support.

Two conferences in the UK, and the colleagues I was fortunate enough to meet there, have been very valuable sources of inspiration and motivation to keep working in this field. First, the Pornified conference in London in 2011, organized by Meg Barker, Rosalind Gill, Emma Renold, and Jessica Ringrose, provided much stimulus. My continued conversations with Jessica Ringrose about the issues discussed in this book have been most valuable to my thinking. I greatly admire her approach to research and to life, and am thankful for her collegial support and friendship. Second, the Girls and Digital Culture conference, in London in 2012, organized by Ofra Koffman and Rosalind Gill, was a fantastic event where I was inspired by so many presentations and conversations with feminist researchers from around the world. I am particularly grateful to Rosalind Gill for her scholarship and for her generous support.

Many thanks go to the team of researchers involved in the project discussed in chapter 4, “Youth, Mobile Technologies, and Gender Politics,” Danielle Tyson, Mary Lou Rasmussen, and Adrian Farrugia. Their enthusiasm and hard work on this research is much appreciated, and these colleagues have provided valuable insights about youth, media, and sexuality along the way.

The team at Palgrave has been most helpful and professional and I am grateful for their assistance throughout the process. Many thanks to Lani Oshima, Nicola Jones, Mara Berkoff, and Elaine Fan. Thanks also to the series editors R. Danielle Egan and Patricia Clough.

Very special thanks goes to all the young people and the two schools who participated in the research projects discussed in this book.

An earlier version of chapter 3 appeared as: Dobson, A. S. (2011). Hetero-sexy representation by young women on MySpace: The politics of performing an “objectified” self. Outskirts: Feminisms Along the Edge, 25(November). I am grateful to the journal, Outskirts: Feminisms Along the Edge, for permission to use this material here. Sections of chapter 2 have been reworked from an early version of the article: Dobson, A. S. (2014). Performative shamelessness on young