Around the world, social movements have become legitimate, yet contested, actors in local, national and global politics and civil society, yet we still know relatively little about their longer histories and the trajectories of their development. This new series seeks to promote innovative historical research on the history of social movements in the modern period since around 1750. We bring together conceptually-informed studies that analyse labour movements, new social movements and other forms of protest from early modernity to the present. We conceive of “social movements” in the broadest possible sense, encompassing social formations that lie between formal organisations and mere protest events. We also offer a home for studies that systematically explore the political, social, economic and cultural conditions in which social movements can emerge. We are especially interested in transnational and global perspectives on the history of social movements, and in studies that engage critically and creatively with political, social and sociological theories in order to make historically grounded arguments about social movements. This new series seeks to offer innovative historical work on social movements, while also helping to historicise the concept of “social movement.” It hopes to revitalise the conversation between historians and historical sociologists in analysing what Charles Tilly has called the “dynamics of contention.”

This book is based on a PhD thesis which I completed at the University of Western Australia. I am grateful to the many academics, scholars, librarians and archivists who have made invaluable contributions to my research. In particular, I would like to thank Dr Fabio Nardelli (Fondo Adelaide Coari, Bologna), Dr Eleonora Cirant and Ms Valeria Mariani (Unione femminile nazionale, Milan), Professor Alfonso Botti and Dr Ilaria Biagioli (Fondazione Romolo Murri, Urbino), Professor Anna Maria Massucci (Centro studi Romolo Murri, Gualdo, Macerata), Suor Maria Grazia Piazza (Centro documentazione e studi "Presenza Donna", Vicenza), Monsignor Antonio Marangoni (Archivi ecclesiastici della diocesi, Vicenza), Dr Sonia Residori and Dr Silvia Calamati (Biblioteca civica bertoliana, Vicenza), Professor Dora Castenetto and Miss Mariuccia Besesti (Fondazione Elena da Persico, Affi, Verona), Dr Simona Ferrantin (Istituto Paolo VI, Rome) and Fr Wilmer Rojas Crespo, O.P. (Fondo Giustiniani Bandini, Rome).

On my visits to Italy, I was fortunate to meet Professor Gabriella Zarri and Dr Roberta Fossati, who kindly drew my attention to publications of interest, as well as Professor Cecilia Dau Novelli, who facilitated my access to the Istituto Paolo VI. I am also indebted to Professor Maria Pia Paoli for her useful comments and suggestions for reading.

I would like to express my gratitude to Winthrop Professor Lorenzo Polizzotto for his supervision while I completed my thesis and for his further generous advice.

Further, this project would not have been finished without the encouragement, enduring patience, unstinting support and intelligent criticism of my husband, Walter Dawes.

Some of the material included in Chapter 3 was published by the Catholic University of America Press in the July 2011 issue of The Catholic Historical Review under the title "The Catholic Church and the Woman Question: Catholic Feminism in Italy in the Early 1900s."
