I have been so lucky to have a number of friends and colleagues who have helped think through many of the areas when putting this book together. This includes, Mairtin Mac an Ghaill, Thomas Johansson, Liviu Popoviciu, Jeepers Andersson, Andreas Ottemo, Marcus Herz, Ylva Odenbring, Anne Dorte; Niels Ulrik Sørensen, Michael Keheler, Ali Javaid, Jhitsyarat Siripai, Chao Yang, Andrea Waling, Kelly Murphey, Lucas Gotzen, Margareta Bohlin, Peter Hakansson, Per Norden, Jeniie Sivenberg, Nils Hammaren, Annette Helman, Ardis Kristen and Xiaodong Lin. A very special thank you to Jonathan Allan, Frank Kariotis and Andrea Waling for their intellectual warmth, kindness and hangover cures.

A number of conferences over the last years have proved invaluable to the development of the book: the NYRIS conference with fantastic input from my Nordic friends, the Men and Power conference in South Africa, the Men Doing Sex conference at Newcastle University, and also my stay with Todd Reeser and the staff and students of Pittsburgh University. A special shout out to the American Men's Studies Association conferences over the past few years—one of the few places that is safe to share ideas with critical friends and is not a forum for academic entrepreneurs.

Colleagues at Newcastle including Gareth Longstaff, Steve Walls, David Baines, Florian Zollman, Karen Ross, Clifton Evers, Darren Kelsey, Gerard Corsane, Peter Hopkins, Pauline Dixon, Steve Humble, Bill Roberts, Kerry Dodds, Sarah Greenhalgh, Jane Hughes and Christine Foster deserve special praise.

This book would not have been at all possible without those who helped carry out the interviews. Jessica Pass, Josephine Ayre, Megan Law and Zoe Bright, your time, help and discussions have been invaluable.

Thank you to my family, who at different times have helped and supported me in different ways: John Haywood, Paul Denny, Lelah McDermott, Tony McDermott, Poppy Haywood and David Hillaby. A special shout out to James Matheson.

Finally, I have been privileged to teach the Sex, Sexuality and Desire module at Newcastle University for a number of years, and I sincerely thank all of the students over those years who taught me things that I never knew was possible. Doing 'Sex' with you was such good fun and I look forward to doing more of it in future years!
