ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This volume grew out of two workshops titled Climate Change and the Humanities which took place at the University of Sussex in autumn 2013 and 2014. Whilst conceiving of the workshops, we deliberately gave the speakers an open brief in terms of the content of their papers. The idea was simply to start a conversation about the topic and see where it took us. Following the success of the workshops and the encouragement of Vinita Damodaran in particular, we decided that there were sufficient grounds for an edited collection. We would like to thank all who attended and participated. In addition, our thanks go to the Centre for World Environmental History and the Centre for Social and Political Thought, both at the University of Sussex, for funding the workshops.

Alex would also like to thank the following people for their intellectual guidance and most importantly for their friendship: Tim Carter, Anthony Booth, Mahon O'Brien, Darrow Schechter, Gordon Finlayson, Jacob Berkson, Richard Weir, Dafydd Huw Rees, David Martínez Rojas, Arthur Willemse, Elliot Rose, Sian Edwards, Dimitri Kladiskakis, Christos Hadjioannou, Jana Elsen, Kris Lipscombe, Chris Davies, Charlotte Coates, Jon Cowan, Amranul Haque, Linda Fernandez, Dave Howard, Joe Hesketh, Larissa Rowe, Harry Lewis. and a special thank you to Vinita Damodaran. Also to my family: Mum, Dad, Frances, Andy, Bar, and Lizzie. However, most importantly, I would like to thank Victoria Moran for her tireless support emotionally and intellectually. This book would not have been possible without you.

James first and foremost thanks Vinita Damodaran for her encouragement in pursuing this project. Her faith has been unwavering, and a great confidence boost. It was due to holding the first Climate Change and Humanities Workshop, in the autumn of 2013, that I decided to change the focus of my own research, and for that I am most grateful. Secondly, thanks go to both my current and former supervisors, Iain McDaniel and Rob Iliffe, for their support and guidance. I would also like to thank Deborah Heath and Paul Heath for their typing support. They both do an incredible job and I know that my own contribution to this book would have been less straightforward without them. Finally, I would like to thank both my family—John, Penny, Georgina and Harry—and my close friends Roz and Lee. Without the help and guidance of these people, I would not be where I am today and for that I am eternally grateful.

Vinita would like to thank Richard Grove for his prophetic vision of the resurgent future of history and the humanities in the light of our current environmental predicament. I would also like to thank Dick Grove, Rohan D'souza, Deepak Kumar, Rob Allan, Mick Frogley, Mark Elvin, Antonia Moon, and Henry Noltie for their inspiring conversations along the way and their faith in our ability to think ourselves out of this crisis.

We would also like to extend our thanks to Palgrave's Jenny McCall for being so supportive in the early stages of the book and also to Jade Moulds, Molly Beck, and Oliver Dyer, whose patience and understanding as deadlines came and went was highly admirable.

About the Editors

Alexander Elliott is a DPhil candidate at the University of Sussex in the Department of Social and Political Thought. He is also a graduate associate of the Centre for World Environmental History. His research interests include climate change, epistemology and the history of philosophy. He is currently writing a philosophy of solidarity.

James Cullis is an MPhil student at the University of Sussex, associated with the Centre for World Environmental History and the Centre for Intellectual History. His research deals with the way environmental and geographic concerns arose within Scottish Enlightenment accounts of societal progress.

Vinita Damodaran is a historian of modern India, interested in sustainable development dialogues in the Global South. Her work ranges from the social and political history of Bihar to the environmental history of South Asia, including using historical records to understand climate change in the Indian Ocean world. Her publications include: Broken Promises: Indian Nationalism and the Congress Party in Bihar (1992), Nature and the Orient: Essays on the Environmental History of South and South-East Asia (1998), Post Colonial India: History Politics and Culture (2000), British Empire and the Natural World: Environmental Encounters in South Asia, (2010), East India Company and the Natural World (2014). She is also the author of several articles in established journals. She is particularly interested in questions of environmental change, identity and resistance in Eastern India. An experienced researcher and teacher, she has an MPhil from Jawaharlal Nehru University and a PhD from Cambridge. Currently, she is the director of the Centre for World Environmental History at Sussex.
