Aim of the Series

As China's power grows, the search has begun in earnest for what super-power status will mean for the People's Republic of China as a nation as well as the impact of its new-found influence on the Asia-Pacific region and the global international order at large. By providing a venue for exciting and ground-breaking titles, the aim of this series is to explore the domestic and international implications of China's rise and transformation through a number of key areas including politics, development and foreign policy. The series will also give a strong voice to non-western perspectives on China's rise in order to provide a forum that connects and compares the views of academics from both the east and west reflecting the truly international nature of the discipline.

who have taught me to be a humanist.
To Ming Zhang, my late husband, who had been my inspiration and support.*

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This research was funded by National Science Foundation (SES-0518083) and Funds for Advancement of the Discipline by the Sociology Program of National Science Foundation, to which I am grateful. I thank Yongping Jiang for being my wonderful research collaborator on studies of Mao and post-Mao generations. My thanks also go to Stein Kuhnle for generously sharing with me his data on Nordic countries; to Science & Society, Emerald, and SAGE for giving me permission to reproduce my articles published in Science & Society (2013), Advances in Gender Research (2012), and Critical Sociology (online in 2012; print in 2014); and to all those who have lent me various kinds of help and moral support along the way of my pursuit of my book project. Furthermore, my gratitude also goes to Sara Doskow and Chris Robinson from Palgrave Macmillan, whose editorial assistance has further contributed to the success of this book.
