ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Without the Amsterdam School for Cultural Analysis (ASCA) at the University of Amsterdam, this book would not have been possible. This institute has been crucial for the academic growth and development of many scholars, not just in financial terms, but especially because of the vibrant research environment it offers. Special thanks go to former managing directors Wanda Strauven, Mireille Rosello, and Christoph Lindner, and, of course, to the heart of the institute: Eloe Kingma and Jantine van Gogh. I owe entire sections in this book to discussions with the participants in the theory seminars organised by Mireille Rosello and Sudeep Dasgupta between 2008 and 2012. Particularly productive were the international ASCA conferences of 2010 and 2011, which made me realise what theory can be when practised.

I am very grateful to the peer reviewers of this publication for their generous, precise, and constructive comments. I also thank Drucilla Cornell and colleagues for the Ubuntu Project and for organising the ubuntu conference in Pretoria in 2011, which made it possible for me to meet the larger community of ubuntu scholars. Special thanks to the Zuid Afrika Huis in Amsterdam for its unique and irreplaceable library. What matters even more are the people who work there and who offered a quiet place to write when most needed: Corine de Maijer, Tineke Dorr, and Aafke van Strien.

Beacons on the way have without a doubt been the subtle questions of Ena Jansen. Thank you for the ungoing conversation. Without the relentless and invaluable critique as well as unflinching support of Esther Peeren, this book would not have existed. You are my intended reader.

And then, the part easiest to acknowledge, but most difficult to describe: the love and support of my family and friends. Jaap, Tonny, Coen, and Carin for all your love, for being my people, for putting up with me, for always making me feel at home, for having my back; Maria for your amazing and dynamic friendship without which I would not know how to be myself; and Marja, always, for existing and even more for being in my life.
