ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book builds on my dissertation, “Early Cinema and the Supernatural,” defended at Carleton University in 2011. Many thanks first of all to my supervisor, Charles O’Brien, and my other committee members: Marc Furstenu, Franny Nudelman, Aboubakar Sanogo and Rob King.

I would like to give special thanks to various professors from Carleton University’s Film Studies programme and from the Institute for Comparative Studies in Literature, Arts and Culture, including André Loiselle, Mitchell Frank, Barbara Leckie, Barbara Gabriel, Mitsuyo Wada-Marciano, Paul Théberge, George McKnight, Mark Langer, Zuzana Pick and Chris Faulkner for their help and support over the years, as well my fellow students, including Owen Lyons, David Richler, Margaret Rose, Steve Rifkin, Jessica Aldred, Marc Raymond, Ben Wright, Dan Sheridan, Sylvie and Paul Jasen, Heather Igloliorte, Matt Croombs, Jeremy Maron, Stacey Loyer, Anne de Stecher, Danielle Wiley, Tom Everett and Kyle Devine.

I would also like to thank my colleagues from the University of Manitoba (including George Toles, Brenda Austin-Smith and David Annandale) and the University of Calgary (including Lee Carruthers, Charles Tepperman and Ryan Pierson).

Many other scholars have kindly helped this project along the way with useful advice. I would like especially to thank Simone Natale, James Cahill, Matthew Solomon, Frank Gray, Esther Peeren, Pamela Thurschwell, Jeffrey Sconce, Adam Hart, Colin Williamson, Brian Jacobson, John Warne Monroe and Tom Gunning.

My work has benefited from the recent explosion in archival material from early cinema on DVD. Special credit must go to the Flicker Alley's wonderful boxed set Georges Méliès: First Wizard of the Cinema (1896–1913) (2008) and its follow-up Georges Méliès: Encore (2010) with newer discoveries—may there be many more “encores” to follow. Other films, especially those of George Albert Smith, I viewed at the British Film Institute in London, largely on 35 mm with a few on VHS. My research into print documents and rare books and periodicals took me to the archives of the Society for Psychical Research, housed in the Cambridge University library, the Harry Price Collection at the University of London, the reading room of the Magic Circle in London and the American Society for Psychical Research in Manhattan. Many thanks to the archivists and librarians at these venues for their support and enthusiasm. I would also like to thank Donna Yates for generously hosting me during the Cambridge leg of my research.

Portions of Chaps. 5 and 6 expand upon writing previously published as “Eroticism and Death: The Skeleton in the Trick Film” in Beyond the Screen: Institutions, Networks and Publics of Early Cinema (2012) and Chap. 7 is an edited version of “‘Visualizing the Phantoms of the Imagination’: Projecting the Haunted Minds of Modernity,” published in Cinematic Ghosts: Haunting and Spectrality from Silent Cinema to the Digital Era (2015). My thanks to John Libbey and to Bloomsbury Academic USA for permission to reprint.
