Aim of the Series

Editorial Board: Rainer Baubock, European University Institute, Italy; James F. Hollifield, Southern Methodist University, USA; Daniele Joly, University of Warwick, UK; Jan Rath, University of Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

The Migration, Diasporas and Citizenship series covers three important aspects of the migration process: firstly, the determinants, dynamics and characteristics of international migration. Secondly, the continuing attachment of many contemporary migrants to their places of origin, signified by the word 'diaspora', and thirdly the attempt, by contrast, to belong and gain acceptance in places of settlement, signified by the word 'citizenship'. The series publishes work that shows engagement with and a lively appreciation of the wider social and political issues that are influenced by international migration. This series develops from our Migration, Minorities and Citizenship series, which published leading figures in the field including Steven Vertovec, Daniele Joly, Adrian Favell, John Rex, Ewa Morawska and Jan Rath.

Acknowledgements

This book is the result of three years of intensive and collaborative immersion into the complex field of social remittances within the enlarged European Union (EU). We would foremost like to thank the National Science Centre (Narodowe Centrum Nauki) for funding the project entitled “Cultural diffusion through social remittances between Poland and the UK”, which allowed us not just to collect data but to pursue an altogether fascinating scholarly adventure.

This book is the best “crop” resulting from our research encounters and although each one of us was responsible for a particular aspect of the study and the corresponding chapters of the book, we freely exchanged ideas, critiques and insights that enriched each other’s work. In this sense it was a collective intellectual endeavour and we bear collective responsibility for the outcomes presented in this book.

Any list of names will be marred by unintentional omission, but here we would like especially to thank Justyna Sarnowska and Lidia Glowacka for their involvement at different stages of this study, for their hard work and insightful comments. The book would not be readable without the linguistic help of Tony Rzepkowski and Jan Warndorff—thank you to both. In addition, many friends and colleagues contributed to this book by offering insights and encouragement during conferences, seminars, workshops, and small and big conversations at the office. Thank you, all.

This book is about real people and the consequences of their actions. We are thus especially indebted to our interviewees. We would like to thank all of you who generously gave us your time, and for your willingness to share with us your experience and for allowing us to enter into your lives several times over the course of this study. Unfortunately, professional ethics and our commitment to anonymity prohibit us from thanking you by name. However, we trust that we treated your experiences and actions with the respect and understanding they fully deserve.
